Abuse

Home is not made public so the abusers cannot find their victims.

The Counseling and Assessment Clinic at Texas A&M University offers counseling for abusers and victims. The clinic's fees are determined on a sliding basis based on income and family size.

Dr. Pam Grossman, a certified psychologist and clinic director, said people must realize they are in an abusive situation before they can be helped.

"There is help available, but they have to want help," she said. "If they don't realize there is a problem, they can't be helped."

She said abusers often deny or minimize their violence.

"When confronted," she said, "they often deny what they have done or minimize it by making excuses."

Grossman said abuse works through a battering cycle.

Phase one is a period of increased tension. Phase two is the actual battering. Phase three is the calm stage, in which the abuser apologizes and makes excuses for his violence.

The victim usually thinks the abuse is over during this stage, but the cycle often continues, Grossman said.

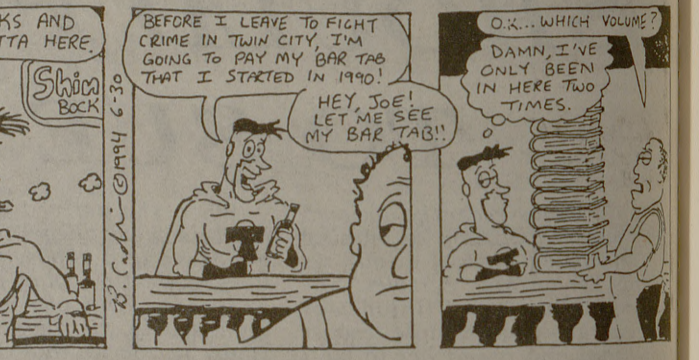

She said people often abuse others because they are under stress and feel out of control. They gain control of their victims by abusing them.

"The abuser is trying to gain control over a situation they feel is out of control," she said.

from other vital NASA programs.

"The United States has poured $11.4 billion into this orbiting boondoggle and we have nothing to show for that expense except a few pieces of hardware and a decimated space program," said Rep. Dick Zimmer, R-N.J., an author of the amendment.

"When you abandon the space station, you stop 30 years of progress in human space flight ...; you leave the space station as a magnificent flying machine without its original mission," said Rep. Robert Walker, R-Pa.

Added Rep. Tom DeLay, R-Texas: "My colleagues, don't fool yourselves — Without the space station, there is no shuttle program; and without that, there is no NASA."

Tomatoes, who will perform at 8:15 p.m. featuring songs from the 1950s and 60s. The fireworks display will begin at 10 p.m.

Sheila Walker, program supervisor for the College Station Parks and Recreation department, said no alcohol will be served at the event.

"This event has always been alcohol-free since it used to be held at Olsen Field," she said. "For the past two years it has been alcohol-free by choice, even though we have moved sites."

No food or drink may be brought in by guests, but concession stands and free watermelon will be available.

Because the turnout was so large last year, people who want to attend this year's event need to obtain tickets, Walker said.

"We had 9,000 people last year, and the facility only holds 5,000, so instead of having to turn people away, we are keeping track of the attendance through tickets," she said.

Tickets for the event, which are free, are still available. They can be picked up at KBTX-TV's main office, Taco Cabana, University Toyota and KTSR Radio.

With all the fun and celebration, College Station police officers are warning people to be cautious.

"Remember not to drink and drive, and don't let your friends drink and drive," said James Kemp, a College Station crime prevention officer.

Also, there is a city ordinance against fireworks, and it is illegal to possess them within city limits, she said.

"If you are caught with them or setting them off, you could be charged with breaking a city ordinance, receive a citation and have to go before a judge," Kemp said.

"We urge everyone to attend the organized celebrations in town where they can go to see fireworks and have fun in a safer environment," she said.
