'The Client' pleads no plot

By Traci Travis
THE BATTALION

"The Client" Starring Susan Sarandon, Brad Renfro, Tommy Lee Jones and Mary-Louise Parker
Directed by Joel Schumacher
Rated PG-13
Playing at Post Oak III

The typical John Grisham plot once again fills the film screen end-to-end with dazzling dialogue in "The Client."

But this time around, the patented familiar Grisham storyline brings a whole new cast of gifted actors and actresses who amazingly make the most with a monotonous screenplay.

Just like the previous plots of "The Fugitive" and "The Firm," this film focuses on an innocent bystander hunted relentlessly by a second party.

While smoking cigarettes in the woods, two Tennessee boys stumble upon a crazed mafia lawyer attempting to commit suicide. In a desperate effort to save the man's life, Mark Sway (Brad Renfro) finds himself trapped inside the lawyer's car, while his younger tear-faced brother looks on.

After confessing to Sway about his discovery of the burial site of a missing, murdered senator, the paranoid lawyer sticks a gun in his own mouth and pulls the trigger.

The suicide leaves Sway's younger brother in a comatose state of post-traumatic stress syndrome and also pulls Sway unwillingly into a murder trial.

A prosecutor known as the "Reverend" Ray Foltrigg (Tommy Lee Jones), who earns his nickname for his amazing ability to quote the Bible in almost every trial, is determined to put Sway on the witness stand. But Sway, fearing for his life, refuses to take the stand.

In an effort to retaliate against the hard-headed, publicity-starved prosecution team and the buried senator's dangerous murderers, Sway hires attorney Reggie Love (Sarandon) to defend him at the cost of one dollar.

The strength of this film is the solid performances of its cast members. Scenes of Sarandon and Jones butting heads over nit-picking legal details are filled with clever inquiries and cutting retorts.

Renfro, a newcomer to the film screen, is but a flicker in "The Client's" galaxy of big-time stars.

His strength is in scenes of wrenching anguish. However, his occasional spurts of emotion begin and end in a fizzle.

"The Client" strays from the typical suspense thriller genre by focusing on the characters, not gory violent scenes. The relationships between characters take centerstage and leave everything else behind.

Including Grisham's plot.

Future

Beside a new club and a restaurant, infrastructure changes also loom for the Northgate area, responding to parking needs and safety concerns.

Joey Dunn, staff planner for College Station planning and development, said the city is accepting proposals to improve the appearance of Northgate through infrastructure improvements.

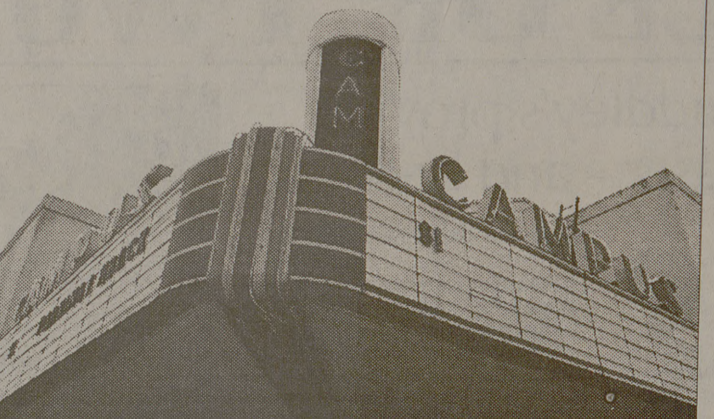

"Northgate has never been a pretty place," Dunn said. "Dumpsters are just stuck out in the middle, and there is no separation between buildings."

"We want to make Northgate more pleasant to the eye."

He said some of the major goals include correcting parking and shopping obstacles, expanding business and entertainment opportunities and preserving the historic character of Northgate.

Preliminary ideas include brick paving on Patricia Street, landscaping, pedestrian walkways and bike paths. Proposals for a mall area behind Northgate stores would create another area for patrons to linger beside the busy University Drive in front of the establishments.

The city will accept proposals from consultants for the next three to four months, and a plan will not be adopted by City Council until the spring or summer of 1995.

Fitz Willy's (above) is slated to open in mid-August, Shadow Canyon (below) should open in September or October.
