evaluation," he said. Murray said students who attempt suicide are bound by the University's Rules and Regulations to submit themselves for psychiatric evaluation within 24 hours.

If a student does not comply with these regulations and seek counseling, Murray said the student is blocked from registration.

Two students have attempted suicide on campus since August 1993, according to the University Police Department.

Chareny Putney, interim associate director of residence life, said students who have alcohol abuse problems are referred to the Center for Drug Prevention and Education.

"If a student is found passed out from drinking too much alcohol and EMTs have to be called, the student signs a waiver and is required to go to the counseling center for alcohol counseling," she said.

Putney said some students vary in their openness to receiving help.

"Some students are receptive and will talk about it," she said, "but others want us to get out of their business."

Pregnant students are also offered some help, Putney said, but are not pursued as closely as those with emotional or alcohol problems.

"If we are aware that a student is pregnant, we may contact the student to offer support and help," she said.

"We would not force a pregnant student to do anything," Sasse said.

Sasse said that was the case for Stephanie Moore, a student who is accused of throwing her baby into the trash chute of Mosher Hall.

"There were offers to help her," he said. "She denied that she was pregnant. No one had any proof that she was pregnant. She didn't engage in any life threatening behavior, so we could not intervene."

Sasse said that student affairs will continue to help students even if they are not always receptive.

"Our motto is, 'connecting those who need with those who care,'" he said.

Man indicted for heiress' death

Con man accused of conspiracy in 20-year-old murder

CHICAGO (AP) — The case of the vanished Brach candy heiress missing since the 1970s broke with charges that a horse-trading suitor arranged her slaying to silence her after a big-money equestrian swindle.

Helen Vorhees Brach was last seen checking out of the Mayo Clinic in 1977. Her body was never found.

Richard Bailey, a stable owner-prosecutors described as a con man preying on older women, was arraigned Wednesday on federal charges and ordered held without bail.

In court awaiting his hearing, a pale, nervous-looking Bailey had to be escorted outside to vomit.

U.S. Attorney James Burns said Brach was killed after threatening to go to authorities after discovering Bailey had duped her into paying hundreds of thousands of dollars for worthless horses.

Bailey also duped other elderly women in a similar horse-trading scheme, Burns said.

"He broke his way into lives and hearts by telling them that he loved them and wanted to marry them," Burns said.

Brach, 65, became the sole heiress of the Brach Candy Co. fortune in 1970, after her husband, Frank, died. Most of her $30 million estate, which included a stable of thoroughbreds, went to charity when she was declared dead in 1984.

The investigation also led to charges against 22 others in an equestrian insurance fraud scheme, which allegedly involved prominent horse owners killing their animals to collect benefits.

"This is the dirty little secret of the (showhorse) industry," said Steve Miller, an assistant U.S. attorney.

Bailey, 65, was charged under federal murder-conspiracy statutes. Bailey arranged Brach's killing but did not admit the crime, Burns said.

Bailey declined to say whether other investors know who killed her.

If convicted on all charges, which include numerous counts, Bailey could be sentenced to 245 years in prison.

Bailey and three accomplices convinced Brach to buy inflated prices, Burns said.

Brach was not charged in the case, Burns said.

"He defrauded thousands of dollars in horses," Burns said.

"To silence Helen Brach, he conspired, solicited and murdered her."

Bailey remained active in the scheme after Brach's death, Burns said. He allegedly ads in the "lonely hearts" of suburban Chicago newspaper to attract wealthy women to attract wealthy women.

Burns said the Brach investigators to kill showhorse scheme to kill showhorse 1989.
