A&M has approximately 470 student-athletes and 45 coaches, with 45 people on coaching staffs. The compliance office monitors athletes throughout their A&M careers, and Compliance Education Coordinator David Batson meets with the coaching staff and teams regularly.

Batson said a large part of his job is answering questions about NCAA regulations from A&M boosters, fans, coaches, the general public and even other Southwest Conference

He said he fielded about 800 calls last year asking for interpretations of NCAA rules. Some questions can be answered by direct reference to the NCAA manual of regulations, an inch-and-a-half thick book updated annually.

There's certain segments of it that I know very, very well," Batson said. "There's probably two-thirds of it that we deal with on a daily basis."

For interpretations of the rules, Batson can call the NCAA or access their computer database. The database is available to all NCAA schools, but many schools don't have it.

Batson said other SWC universities often call and ask him to look up interpretations. Investigating possible violations is also part of the compliance staff's job, Ellison said.

"Sometimes it's totally consuming, and sometimes it's a minimal part," he said.

During last year's NCAA investigation of the Texas A&M football program, the compliance office put together information for the NCAA and for A&M, Ellison said.

The NCAA and A&M were investigating allegations that nine student-athletes working part-time for a former student during the summer of 1992 received payment for work never completed.

Due to the investigations, A&M suspended several players from the 1993 Cotton Bowl and from early games in the 1993 football season In the spring of 1994, the NCAA officially prohibited A&M from playing in bowl games or on television for one year and put the football program on probation for five Ellison said it's hard to predict where violations will occur. "You can always set up a way to monitor it after the fact," she said. "But you're always going to have inadvertent violations."

There's a misconception that A&M is not committed to compliance and that's totally false," she said. "Traditionally the programs that have been on probation are the ones that understand the need for compliance.

Fish Camp

"The seriousness of his injury was not obvious at all because he stood up and was very lucid, speaking to people and making decisions for himself," he said. Mike Knox, director of Fish Camp, said the organization will not be held liable for the incident.

"Campers do sign a form re-leasing Fish Camp from the responsibility of accidents," he said. Knox said everyone at Fish

Camp was notified of the situation after the ambulance left. "Everyone was informed because we didn't want anyone to be alarmed or have parents calling," he said. At the request of the family, students who were at camp were informed of his death when they all gathered Wednesday after-

Powell said people from the University and the clergy at Lakeview Methodist Assembly were on hand for students who needed someone to talk to. The funeral was held Friday, Aug. 19, at 4 p.m. and services were at the First Christian Church. Hart was buried at the Oakwood Cemetery in Huntsville.

Kibler said several representatives from the University attended the funeral.

"There were a bunch of students from Fish Camp at his funeral and numerous University officials including Dr. Southerland and Dr. Carolyn Adair," he

"Everyone at Fish Camp on Wednesday was made aware that Chris will be honored at Silver Taps which will give all students a chance to gather and honor him," Kibler said. Silver Taps is a memorial service held the first Tuesday of every month in honor of Aggies who have died.

Dr. J. Malon Southerland, Texas A&M's vice president for student affairs, said a critical review of Fish Camp policies and procedures will be done.

"Anytime you have an instance that is this serious we do a critical review," he said.

Kibler said Fish Camp is like many other programs that are evaluated every year, but there will be closer scrutiny and various questions asked about proce-

"We are looking at whether or not we're satisfied with every thing that goes on," he said. "There will be more focus on the recreational time.

Kibler added that school officials have always been pretty satisfied about the training the counselors receive.

"The procedures for this type of emergency are pretty sound,

Knox said he thinks of this as a learning experience.

"We've gone over this in our heads and we think we did everything we could," he said. "There may be more emphasis on situations like this but we're pretty confident that we did everything
