University," Bowen said. "The problem has been corrected though."

Gary Engelgau, executive director of A&M's admissions and records, said the error is regretted by the University.

"We set up systems, and systems don't always work as planned," Engelgau said. "The numbers sent to the magazine were overlooked, and I apologize for the mistake."

Rene Henry, executive director of University relations, said a letter to Money Magazine's editor was mailed Monday, notifying them of the error.

"It will take a few weeks before we hear a response from the magazine," Henry said. "A&M wants to find out exactly what sort of impact the transposed numbers played in A&M's ratings.

"We also want to see if other factors lowered A&M's ratings as well," he said.

Henry said he was surprised when he saw A&M was not on the list because the University's tuition and fees are comparable to those of the University of Texas in Austin, which ranked 13th on the list.

"Since we are both state schools, our monetary fees should be similar," he said. "I would have expected us to be under Texas's 13th ranking or at least close."

Rachel Campbell, a senior petroleum engineering major, said A&M's drop in the ratings does not make sense.

"A&M being off the chart on Money Magazine's top 100 college bargains really surprised me," Campbell said. "What was so surprising was the amount A&M dropped — from 42 to past the 100 mark."

"I don't think it will have a large effect on A&M, though, because of its prestige as a University," she said.

Eight Texas colleges did make the list. Rice University was ranked No. 2 for the second year in a row, followed by the University of Texas in Austin at 13th place, Trinity University at 24th place and Baylor University was ranked 34th place.

Austin College in Sherman ranked 47th, Southwestern University 56th, St. Mary's University of San Antonio ranked 77th, and the University of Dallas at 99th place.

According to Money Magazine, the best education for the dollar can be found at New College of the University of South Florida.

Houston's Rice University was at second place; Trenton State College in New Jersey at third; the State University of New York in Binghamton at fourth, and Northeast Missouri State University at fifth place.

Money Magazine's rankings will be released in a special edition of the magazine which will hit the newsstands Sept. 6.

The rankings are based on factors such as entrance exam results, graduation rates, faculty resources and deployment, budgets for instruction and student services and default ratios on graduates' student loans. These figures are then compared with each college's tuition and fees.

The rankings are a reflection of the monetary value of the school, not the academic education the students receive.

Sugg

This summer the Board of Regents nixed the $120 million proposed power plant that Sugg endorsed before a University-hired consulting firm determined the project was a bad investment.

Gaston said Sugg did not mention the canceled project in the resignation letter, but Gaston said he would not be surprised if it was one reason he resigned.

"I know he's worked hard on that project," he said. "I wouldn't be surprised if he is worn out."

Sugg declined to comment on his resignation when reached at his home Monday night.

The A&M Physical Plant Department employs over 1,100 people and is responsible for all campus utilities, such as air-conditioning, water and phone services. It is also in charge of any campus landscaping, cleaning and renovations needed.

violence from All-University Night. Student leaders met in May and August to discuss ways of convincing students to decrease violence.

Sweeney said student leaders are trying to return All-University Night to its original intention.

"We are all Aggies; we do not need to be beating everyone up," he said. "We are trying to return All-University Night to its original intent — a welcome back and introduction of the fall sports team members."

Administrators and student leaders addressed the crowd in an attempt to motivate students for the upcoming year. Among those speaking were Southerland; Dr. Ray Bowen, A&M president; Brooke Leslie, student body president; and Lynn Hickey, senior associate athletic director.

The speakers stressed the importance of Aggie spirit and the excitement of the upcoming year.
