Boenig ready to work for students

Student Senate speaker, Tobin Boenig, is ready to work hard this year for students.

THE BATTALION

The speaker of Texas A&M's Student Senate said the benefit of being involved in Student Government is knowing that you are doing something to help others out.

Tobin Boenig, a senior agriculture development major, said that idea is something his parents instilled in him a long time ago.

"In a world where everybody is doing things for themselves it's nice to know you are doing something to help others," Boenig said.

Dr. Malon Southerland, vice president for student affairs, said Boenig is friendly, outgoing, accurate, competent and energetic.

Brooke Leslie, student body president, has known Boenig for seven years and said he is someone who is dedicated and loyal.

"Most importantly, I think he is a person who does things for the right reasons," she said.

Boenig said as speaker of the Senate his job is to keep the administration informed of what students want.

"When the Student Senate decides something, I go to the administration and then what was decided," he said.

Southerland said as one of the principal student leaders, the Senate speaker is representative of senators and expresses interests and concerns on a variety of issues.

"The individual's competence, experience and abilities are very important to the administration and the student body," he said. "I think Toby will be successful in his position. He was successful last year and why he was elected this year."

Boenig said Student Government is students' voice to the administration.

"We tell them exactly what students want," he said. "When someone comes with a problem, we want to grasp it."

Cavalry member recovering from fall

Smith gives credit to fellow Aggies

By Lisa Messer
THE BATTALION

Parsons Mounted Cavalry member Jason Smith said he doesn't remember much about the horse riding accident he was in this summer, but he does know it was the prayers and support of his Corps buddies that pulled him through the critical time.

"I had so many good friends helping me, and people all over Texas were praying for me," Smith said.

"Unfortunately, I can't remember one thing before I left College Station to go to Austin," he said. "I've been hearing about all the people who came to see me and stay with me, but I can't remember them and thank them."

Smith said he hates asking his friends for help but knows it was their support that helped him survive the accident.

Smith, a senior recruiting officer for Company G-2, was practicing figure eights with an untrained horse July 5 at the Cavalry's complex on FM 2818.

"He was a new horse," Smith said. "He was donated to the Cav last semester, and I was trying to get his lead changes down. We had been practicing them for three days already."

Smith said he does not remember much about the accident but knows the horse tripped and fell. Smith was flung to the ground, where he hit his head.

"I had the reins in my left hand," Smith said. "I figure when he tripped I reached for the saddle horn. My hands were

A&M helps put high school dropouts on the right path

By Scott Powers
THE BATTALION

Texas A&M, the State of Texas, and the Department of the Navy have entered into a partnership through a program aiming to rescue at-risk youth.

Lt. Al de Medeiros, program coordinator, said the Seaborn Conservation Corps is a federally funded residential program through which qualified high school dropouts will be able to attain a G.E.D. and receive job training in the maritime industry.

"Basically, it is another chance for kids who have dropped out but not turned bad yet," de Medeiros said.

The program lasts nine months during which the youths will attend academic classes, undergo a physical fitness program, and participate in 900 hours of environmental projects, de Medeiros said.

He said projects will include restoring wetlands and cleaning up beaches in the Galveston area.

In addition, he said, the youths will receive training for entry level positions in the maritime industry.

The number of participants will be held to 100 per session, de Medeiros said. They will be chosen by a panel of staff. The youth cannot have a criminal record or a history of substance abuse.

Dr. Ray Bowen, A&M president, said the University is pleased to be involved in the program, which is the cause of the school's ability to provide the training for participants through its facilities in Galveston.

Bowen said A&M will provide the ship, the Texas Per, where much of the training will take place.

The program is scheduled to begin in September.
