Richardson has improved significantly since his time at A&M. He can throw the ball downfield with accuracy, and is getting better and better at making smart decisions under pressure. He also accounted for all three of the Oilers' scores on Sunday.

A lot of Richardson's critics put down his uncanny ability to get the ball in the end zone by suggesting he only collects the stats in "garbage time", when opposing defenses have their second and third string players in.

To that, I say, so what? Despite being second or third stringers, every player on the field is still part of a very select group of athletes that have earned a spot in the NFL. And don't you think those guys are playing their butts off trying to impress their coaches and get an increase in their playing time?

Fact is, Richardson's not only competing with these guys, he's tearing them up.

The Oilers still have a good secondary and a good corps of receivers. Gary Brown had a great bust-out year last season, and despite a poor performance on Sunday, he is the Oilers' main running man. But a lot of the Oilers' veterans are expendable for a team that is rebuilding.

Many of the Oilers' players are the types that a team making a playoff team would covet, and be willing to trade draft picks for. Lorenzo White is one, as are Webster Slaughter, Al Smith and even though it hurts to say it, Childress.

The Oilers' have been saying "It's gotta be this year," for the last three years. This year, they can finally hold their heads up high, they were telling the truth last season, this year they've got no chance.

But they can still make it fun for the fans, who pay the man who pays their salaries. The fans absolutely go bananas when Richardson comes in the game. The real fans are mainly working-class Houstonians, and they worship a hard-working player.

That's what made the "Luv Ya Blue" era special, the players the Oilers had were not the most talented in the league (save Earl Campbell), but they gave it their all every game, and twice came within reach of the Super Bowl. Richardson is that kind of player, and maybe he can rub off on some of the other players, and remind them of the other reason they play ball, besides the money.

Do Houston a favor, Bud....
Start Bucky.

Rice breaks touchdown record

49er scores three TDs Monday, tops NFL list

SANTA CLARA, Calif. (AP) — Jerry Rice had little time to savor the record-setting effort that made him the NFL's all-time touchdown leader.

No sooner had he scored his 127th career touchdown Monday night in the San Francisco 49ers' 44-14 rout of the Los Angeles Raiders than the 49ers wide receiver was caught up again in the Joe Montana-Steve Young rivalry.

The 49ers travel to Kansas City next Sunday for their first confrontation ever with Montana. He led San Francisco to four Super Bowl wins in the 1980s before losing his job to Young and joining the Chiefs in a 1993 trade.

"We've got a big game coming up and I'm not going to have a lot of time to enjoy it," said Rice, who surpassed Hall of Fame full-back Jim Brown's previous mark by scoring three times.

"But it'll be nice to see Joe again. He helped me get this record," Rice said.

Montana and Rice connected on 55 touchdown passes. Young and Rice have hooked up for scores 49 times, including two against the Raiders.

The first came on a 69-yard bomb from Young. Rice then made like a running back to pull into a tie with Brown, scoring on a 23-yard reverse and set the record with 4:05 to go when he outjumped Albert Lewis for the ball and tumbled into the end zone.

"He made a great play," said

NFL's all-time touchdown leader

Jerry Rice of the San Francisco 49ers scored three touchdowns Monday against the Los Angeles Raiders to become the all-time touchdown leader in the National Football League.

The all-time leaders in touchdowns:

	Rush	Rec.	Ret.	Total
1. Jerry Rice-x	7	120	0	127
2. Jim Brown	106	20	0	126
3. Walter Payton	110	15	0	125
4. John Riggins	104	12	0	116
5. Marcus Allen-x	92	21	1	114
6. Lenny Moore	63	48	2	113
7. Don Hutson	3	99	3	105
8. Steve Largent	1	100	0	101
9. Franco Harris	91	9	0	100
10. Eric Dickerson	90	6	0	96

Lewis. "I couldn't have covered him any better. I was grabbing at his arm, grabbing at the ball but somehow he managed to hang onto it."

"I'm embarrassed it was a little short," said Young. "I had someone on my back and that's all I had. But it is kind of perfect that it came on a ball that was a little short and he went up and took it away for a touchdown."

Teammates rushed to congratulate Rice.

"He was crying; he deserved to cry," running back Ricky Walters said. "He worked so hard for this. He wanted it. That's how he was able to score on that reverse. That's how he was able to go up for that last ball and get it."

Rice actually thought he was done for the night after scoring his second TD.

"Why not?" said offensive coordinator Mike Shanahan. "I thought if we can get it now, it would be great."

So, did the 49ers make the right decision in keeping Young and trading Montana?

"I'm not going to put myself on the spot by saying, what if or what, you know. It's up to the organization," he said.

Rice said likes the way he and Young have developed as a tandem and thinks they'll get even better.

"I watch Joe play during the season. I watch him throw those balls. I watch him place those balls right in receivers hands," Rice said.

"It brings back a lot of memories to me. But you know. One thing I never told Joe. I never told Joe he was the greatest to ever play the game. It's weird because you get caught up at times and you don't think about situations like that until something happens. And he was the best to ever play the game."

Club teaches Tae-Kwon-Do

Sport offers students way to improve physical health, learn self-defense moves

THE BATTALION

How can the typical A&M student get in shape, learn to protect themselves and be part of a long-standing tradition? No, not by bulking up at Bonfire Cut, but rather by signing up for classes offered by the Texas A&M Tae-Kwon-Do club.

Eddie Bartimmo, president of the 23-year old club, compares the sport to kick boxing since some of the moves are alike. But Bartimmo said unlike the depiction of Tae-Kwon-Do in motion pictures, the class is less sensationalistic but nevertheless effective.

"We give a well-rounded beginning introduction to Tae-Kwon-Do," Bartimmo said. "We achieve this with the use of kicks, and with showing the proper way to hit and punch."

Nearly 50 percent of participants in the classes get involved as a way to improve their physical conditioning. Bartimmo praises the sport as an excellent way for students to get into prime physical shape.

"This beats getting into a leotard and doing aerobics," Bartimmo said. "(Tae-Kwon-Do) strengthens muscle groups, increases flexibility and aids in balancing the strength of the right and left sides of the body."

Once achieving the highest level, a black belt, many students enter competitions at the local and national level.

Member Christian Crowder says competition was the primary reason that he got involved. "Competition highlights the art and different styles of Tae-Kwon-Do," Crowder said.

Another member of the club, black belt Nancy VanRiper began Tae-Kwon-Do because her father worried about her being able to defend herself when she left for college. Although she has never been in a situation where she has had to defend herself, she knows a few women who have successfully defended themselves with Tae-Kwon-Do against would-be attackers.

Bartimmo says one of the main goals of the classes is to teach people basic moves to help them defend themselves.

"We're trying to prevent people from panicking when they are attacked," Bartimmo said. "Instead of freezing, the students learn various moves to safely get out of a dangerous situation."
