Study finds seniors raising children face variety of problem

WASHINGTON (AP) - Lowincome elderly people struggling to raise their grandchildren are being denied welfare benefits by caseworkers who refuse to acknowledge the growing numbers of three-generation families, a seniors advocacy group said in a report released today.

The report, by the American Association of Retired Persons, documents the hardships facing seniors who become parents again, often at a time when their health may be failing and their financial security at risk.

AARP's study found the number of children under age 18 living in homes headed by grandparents increased by more than 50 percent in the past two decades, from 2.2 million in 1970 to 3.34 million in 1993.

In most cases, the mother of the children is living with the family. But in one-third of such families, neither parent is present.

Social problems, such as joblessness, drug and alcohol addiction, imprisonment, dea lated to street crimes and ing, AIDS and child abus largely to blame, the study AARP, the nation's large niors group, based its stu Census Bureau data and its telephone survey of a smal ple of the estimated half-m midlife and older American are on their own in caring grandchild.

These families, the found, tend to be poor. More half had incomes of less $20,000, and more than a live at or below the poverty.

Twenty-eight percent grandparent caregivers welfare benefits. But AAR others have trouble when seek a monthly check from to Families with Depe Children, the state-federa fare program.

The association said problem is due largely to welfare workers who " the law by refusing to federal guidelines.
