

Diseases Shuttle Discovery landing may be delayed

Stormy forecast may force Edwards A.F.B. landing

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — With their mission accomplished, Discovery's six astronauts looked forward to coming home Monday and taking their first showers in a week and a half.

They may have to wait. Stormy weather was forecast for Kennedy Space Center at the 2:23 p.m. scheduled landing. NASA could send the shuttle to Edwards Air Force Base in California later in the day.

"It's pretty fatiguing up here. I think a lot of us are looking forward to getting home, getting a good shower and some good old Earthbound things we enjoy," Discovery's pilot, L. Blaine Hammond Jr., said Sunday.

On the other hand, Hammond said he and his crewmates wouldn't mind spending another day in orbit "because it's an opportunity so rare." They've been aloft since Sept. 9. The astronauts achieved everything they set out to do. They released and retrieved a sun-gazing satellite, measured the damaging effects of their own steering jet exhaust on space structures, and helped direct laser pulses at Earth for an atmospheric study.

And — most spectacularly — they tested a new jet pack during a rare untethered spacewalk.

Astronaut Mark Lee described the spacewalk as a once-in-a-lifetime "special treat." He became the first human satellite in 10 years Friday when he disconnected his lifeline and used the jet pack to drift over the open cargo bay.

Haiti

The agreement also requires Haitian army chief Philippe Biamby to give up his authority, officials said. Though not required to leave Haiti, Cedras and Biamby were expected to do so.

Police chief Michel Francois is "no longer a player in this agreement," one official said, indicating his post would simply disappear.

Clinton said that Aristide — ousted in September 1991 — had promised "no vengeance, no violence, no retribution."

"This is a time for peace," Clinton said. "This is a good agreement for the United States and Haiti," he declared.

Aristide spokesman Jean Claude Martineau expressed qualified optimism: "It seems that we are coming out of a long, long dark night. Let's hope that we expect will happen, will happen," he said in a brief telephone interview.

Cedras has reneged on earlier agreements to depart, most recently Oct. 30, 1993.

Talks between Carter, Powell and Nunn and Cedras began on Saturday after Clinton had telegraphed his intention to invade Haiti and overthrow the military leaders if necessary. Cedras led the coup which ousted Aristide from office in September 1991.

Late Sunday afternoon, Clinton dispatched National Security Advisor Tony Lake and Haiti envoy William Gray to brief Aristide on negotiations with the men who deposed him.

It took evidence that U.S. planes were en route before Cedras would agree to give up power, Clinton said. He said 61 planes with Army 82nd Airborne paratroopers were actually airborne at the time. They were recalled to Fort Bragg, N.C.

Defense Secretary William Perry and Gen. John Shalikashvili were at the White House with Clinton when the accord was reached, working on the details of the peaceful insertion of U.S. troops to maintain order in Haiti.

The Pentagon's invasion plans had called for paratroopers to drop into Haiti as part of the leading edge of the assault.

The troops "will go in the daytime," a senior officer said.

An invasion could have brought American casualties, U.S. military leaders warned, and Clinton was under political pressure to avoid combat.

Clinton began his day in church, bowing his head as a prayer was said for American troops, and the commander in chief who might have to send them in harm's way. The Rev. J. Phillip Wogaman said Clinton is burdened by "awesome and sometimes very lonely responsibilities."

He returned to the White House and spent the rest of the day in the Oval Office with his senior foreign policy advisers, including Secretary of State Warren Christopher, Perry, Shalikashvili and Vice President Al Gore.

Clinton kept in continuous contact with the diplomatic team, which also included retired Gen. Colin Powell and Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga.

The trio, dispatched Saturday, met repeatedly with Haitian military rulers, including Cedras who was installed as the nation's military leader after a coup that threw Aristide out of power.

Perry said U.S. forces were ready to invade if the talks had failed, or secure peace if the military leaders agree to leave.

As some 20 warships and a force of 20,000 troops awaited the president's final order to move, Perry described a three-phased military maneuver that could be adjusted depending on the outcome of Carter's talks.

Day Care

Senate's executive committee, said the Senate's proposal for on-campus care offers a sliding pay scale plan as well as several locations on campus.

"Most large universities in the U.S. have on-campus child care facilities, Mazzullo said. "We are many years behind on this."

Dr. Karen Watson, assistant dean of engineering and co-chair of the Faculty Senate's Status of Women Committee, said the lack of on-campus day care affects the quality of life for A&M students and faculty.

"There are many faculty members and graduate students that don't have nearby families to help them care for their children when they leave town or spend long hours researching," Watson said. "Some of them end up leaving because of problems as small and correctable as this." Watson said that former University administrators have not been willing to look at the possibility of on-campus day care facilities.

"We've been saying there is a need for years, but President Bowen is the first to really listen," Watson said.

Restaurants

Pat Ferreri, owner of Ferreri's restaurant and former president of the Bryan-College Station restaurant board, said increasing the number of restaurants in the area is not a good idea.

"We have already have too many," Ferreri said. "Our area needs businesses that will promote jobs for people — not restaurants."

"Factories, mercantile and manufacturers would promote jobs and help our community," he said. "New restaurants are just hurting established business owners."

Ferreri said the competition that new restaurants promote is hard on the family operations that don't have the money to cut corners.

"When a new restaurant comes to town people always go to try it out, and this has a negative economic effect on the current businesses," he said.

Dr. Thomas Saving, a Texas A&M distinguished professor and director of the Private Enterprise Research Center, said new restaurants may not force other restaurants to lower prices. "It all relates to the restaurant's increasing its volume — this is what lowers the prices," Saving said. "If more people go out to eat, then the restaurants can lower their prices. "I'm not saying that they won't at all, just maybe not enough to make a difference," he said. Saving said more restaurants don't necessarily mean more jobs. "Restaurants need a certain number of clients to allow them to increase the number of waiters," he said.
