'Oleanna'

OPAS presentation puts sexual harassment on center stage

By Jennifer Gressett
THE BATTALION

Sexual harassment has become a highly controversial issue in recent years. It is for this reason that the Opera and Performing Arts Society will present "Oleanna," tomorrow night in Rudder Auditorium.

The two-character play, which addresses sexual harassment on the college campus, is the first program of Issues Through the Arts, an OPAS series designed to focus on today's most pressing issues.

Written and directed by David Mamet, the play takes place in the office of a college professor (W.H. Macy) who is about to receive tenure. In the midst of buying his new home, he is interrupted by a young freshman (Rebecca Pidgeon) who has come to discuss the failing grade she received in his course.

Preoccupied with his house plans, the professor hardly tends to the needs of his student. After some persistence, she manages to soften him.

However, he does little more than lay a hand on her shoulder and ramble on about his views on higher education.

To the student, his response is simply an elitist expression that being a professor makes him more important than those he teaches.

Although he sees it as innocent affection, his response is very intense," Ramaswamy said.

"That's one reason the play is being held - so that the audience can participate."

Performances will be at 7 p.m. and 8 p.m. tomorrow.

OPAS, said the play does not make accusations toward the student or the professor.

"The issue is whether this is sexual harassment. Is he really harassing her, or is she just accusing him?" Ramaswamy explains. "We leave the decision
