Legislature

"They will be looking to see how we clean up our act," Thompson said. "I think the ethics policy we just passed was a very good step in the right direction."
 A&M Regent Billy Clayton said he thinks funding will be a major issue for A&M because programs such as prisons and health care often receive a large portion of state funding.
 "This leaves higher education kind of taking a back seat," Clayton said.
 "Since 1985, higher education has been really shortchanged as far as funding goes."
 Clayton said he thinks A&M will be able to get past some of its recent problems.

 "I think we've turned the corner," he said. "We're back on track. We've got new people in place in the president's and chancellor's offices."
 Brooke Leslie, student body president, said she does not think the media coverage of A&M events will affect the legislature.
 "Anytime Texas A&M is beaten up in the media, it's going to hurt," Leslie said. "If the average Texan sees their money and tax dollars go to a school they don't have faith in, it will hurt us. Hopefully, it won't be that big of a player."
 Leslie will testify in front of the legislature on behalf of A&M.
 She is working with Student Government's Legislative Study Group, conducting research to decide the best strategy for

A&M in preparing for the legislative session.
 Leslie said the biggest issues facing A&M will be funding cuts and tuition increases.
 "Those are the main issues," she said. "Everything else relates back to them."
 Minority faculty recruitment and retention could also be a factor for A&M, she said.
 Gaston said the legislature often considers a school's student and faculty retention programs.
 Gaston said it is hard to anticipate the outcome of the session.
 "We were told to request no more than what we had received last year," he said. "We compared what we had and what we need, and there was a big difference."
 "I hope the budgetary climate will change between now and the time the legislature convenes in January."

The University system requests for funding in the ton said officials from the committees shortly after group convenes, probably in February or March.
 Funding for Texas all state universities is determined on a formula for A&M will receive a amount of money for departments based on formula.
 Thompson said A&M are currently involved in planning for each year to decide what approach when facing the legislature.
 "Our biggest strategy communication," he said.
 The Board of Regents consider the System's final its December meeting the approach officials will hours per horse just to prepare for a Saturday march-in," Watson said.

 "That's a lot of prep time for ten minutes in and out. They spend thirty hours a week after classes taking care of the horses, and the juniors take turns coming out every morning at 6:00 to feed the horses."
 Watson said that since trips are stressful on the horses, only the seniors are allowed to spend the nights in hotels.
 "The juniors get to sleep in the trucks," Watson said, "and the sophomores sleep on hay bales near the horses."
 Watson said he is afraid that many current members of the Cavalry will not be able to afford its costs next year.
 "We used to have a $55,000 budget from the University," Watson said, "but starting next year, we have to be entirely self-sufficient. That means we either have to find donors or everyone will have to sponsor themselves for about $1,000."
 "We're looking for someone to sponsor us for a year or so. It's a hard task to get letters to old Cav members, but we're scouring the country."
 The Cavalry has canceled two trips originally scheduled for this year to save money.
 Instead, the Cavalry is traveling to Oklahoma to perform in the American Quarter Horse Association World Show in November.

Camp

"As of right now, I will be concentrating on Fish Camp," he said, "but that doesn't mean it won't affect other student activities."
 Reber said he has gone through the filed reports of the incident.
 "I've picked out names of people in the reports and will talk to them," he said.
 Southerland said he has had one verbal meeting with those who will be talked to, and Reber was present.
 "We went over basic information and what the objectives are and are not," he said.
 Reber said he will talk to the people in the reports and listen to suggestions on practices and policies.
 Southerland said the review is expected to produce recommendations for the organization.
 "We want to find out what the policies and procedures in place are and what we can learn from this incident," he said.

Theresa Kolker, director of Camp, said the organization is viewing its procedures.
 "Every year, we look at regulations and regulations and we do," Kolker said. "We look at what we can do to improve Camp. It's something that we constantly discussing."
 Southerland said the review have a positive affect on student activities, not just Fish Camp.
 "Whatever the recommendations of the review are," he said, "we relate to those activities and if they carry implications to other groups."
 Southerland said the review not automatically pointing at anyone.
 "I always use the word review instead of investigation," he said, "are not reviewing just things locally related to the Fish Camp incident. If there were some reason believe that someone were at then it would be an investigation."
 Reber said he has until December to finish the review, and then he turn in a report to Southerland.
