Bats

was several years ago, when three or four bats swooped around during a pianist's performance, Chaloupka said.

"He loved it," Chaloupka said. "He played the 'Batman' theme for an encore."

About seven years ago, MSC OPAS brought a production of "Dracula" to Rudder and supplied some unscheduled props — a couple of real bats mixed in with the fake bats rigged to fly on wires.

"No one ever even noticed they were in there," Chaloupka said. "Everyone thought they were just part of the show."

Chaloupka said the bats usually stay in the high open area above the audience and avoid people. The few that have wandered into Rudder mostly made their way out after a week or so, he said.

Bats also drop by the Faculty Club occasionally, Kelli Barnes, senior secretary, said. Pest control workers netted one there two months ago.

"He was just hanging from the ceiling," she said. "He was real cute and fuzzy."

Baumgardner said even though they may be cute, even insect-eating bats can bite, and disturbing them is not advisable.

Bats lying on the ground are likely to be sick or injured, he said, and should not be handled.

Almost all Texas bats are insect eaters, Schmidly said. Carnivorous and "vampire" bats (which drink the blood of other mammals) are tropical.

Most Mexican free-tailed bats return to caves in the Texas Hill Country to raise their young in nursery colonies, which can number in the millions.

Some 40 million Mexican free-tailed bats live in Bracken Cave, near San Antonio, forming the world's largest colony of warm-blooded mammals.

charges, but did make the indictment more specific.

The charges against Smith stemmed from allegations that he solicited personal benefits from Barnes & Noble for his wife, including airline flights to New York City, theater tickets, meals and lodging while there.

The actions occurred while Texas A&M and Barnes & Noble negotiated a contract to privatize the campus bookstore.

The investigation by Turner and the Texas Rangers began last year when questions over the contract with Barnes & Noble were raised in an anonymous letter sent to Gov. Ann Richards.

During the first pre-trial, Turner said he plans to call former A&M Chancellor William Mobley and four employees of Barnes and Noble, Inc. to the stand to testify. Turner said they will review and evaluate the Barnes and Noble contract and a part of the A&M Policies and Procedures Manual that includes travel policy.

DeGuerin said the Smiths repaid Barnes and Noble for the expenses after the trip and insists that they did not do anything wrong.

"deviant sexual intercourse."

It has been on the books for more than 100 years but is not enforced. The constitutionality of the law has been questioned in several court cases, and a state attorney general's opinion on the matter is pending.

Keith Roberts, president of the Gay and Lesbian Student Association, said the group's opponents are "confusing sex with sexuality."

"It's obviously blatant discrimination," he said. "It's such a twisted logic to think that because we're a gay rights group there is going to be gay sex going on. This is exactly the thing that we're trying to combat."

Roberts said about 10 percent of the university's 12,800 students are gay and there are 40 GLSA members.

If its organizational status is cancelled, the group would lose its student government funding, which was $106 this year, said student government president Jared Wylie. About 100 groups petition each year for $44,000 and the average amount to each group is $380, Wylie said.

The GLSA can appeal any decision by the student government.

Dianne Hardy-Garcia, executive director of the Lesbian Gay Rights Lobby of Texas, said the crusade at Stephen F. Austin represents a growing trend.

Finding electronic mail addresses

An electronic address identifies your "home" in the computer world, just as your street address identifies your home in the real world. If you want to use a computer to send and receive electronic mail (e-mail), you must first have a home.

Electronic addresses are typically made up of two parts: a logon-ID and a node. The logon-ID identifies you and your home. The node identifies the computer your home resides on. (Synonyms for logon-ID include userid and username.) For example, in the electronic address C1B6760@ACS.TAMU.EDU, C1B6760 identifies the person and ACS.TAMU.EDU identifies the computer this person has an account on.

When you send electronic mail, software on your own system looks at the node—the name of the recipient's computer—and figures out how to route your mail towards that destination. When the mail arrives, software on the target system looks at the first part of the address—your logon-ID—and figures out how to deliver the mail to the recipient.

Electronic mail addresses identify networks

Often, the form of the electronic mail address will give you a good indication of the network that address resides on. Internet addresses take the form LOGONID@NODE. The node portion of Internet addresses can take two forms:

- The node portion of the domain address is almost always made up of multiple words separated by periods. For example, ACS.TAMU.EDU
- The node form of the IP address is a series of numbers also separated by periods. For example, 128.194.3.89

A computer may be on multiple networks at the same time, so it's possible that the same account could be referenced by different address forms.

Finding electronic mail addresses

Perhaps one of the most difficult obstacles in using electronic mail is finding the address of someone you wish to write. The best way of going about this is to compare finding an electronic mail address with finding someone's postal address. In both cases, the easiest method is to call the person and ask for their address, however other options are available.

Electronic phone directories

If you wanted to find someone's home address, one of the first places you would probably look is in the phone directory. Well, to find an electronic address, one of the first places to look would be in an electronic phone directory. Here at Texas A&M (and other places too), there is an electronic phone directory called Ph.

Almost every person associated with Texas A&M has an entry in Ph. One of the things that makes this phone directory special is that each person can maintain most of the information themselves, including their electronic mail address. If a person has taken the time to maintain their e-mail address in Ph, you can look up their address with a program also called Ph. For information on using Ph to look up someone's electronic mail address, or to update your own entry, contact a CIS Help Desk.

Gopher

But what if the person isn't at Texas A&M? All is not lost, but things may be a little tougher. Again, the first place to start would be to look in their electronic directory. (Of course, this assumes that their site has an electronic directory!) The best way to find the electronic directory for another site is to use Gopher. For more information on Gopher, contact a CIS Help Desk.

By choosing the menu option Gophers Worldwide you can get to the Gopher server at another site. If that site is running Gopher, if they are also running an electronic phone directory, and if the person you want to contact has included their e-mail address in their directory entry, then you will be able to find their address.
