day wasn't a party, but it wasn't one for the guys either."
 Scott said a lot of the negative comments came from former students.
 "My parents would be watching the march-ins and people would be making comments," Scott said.
 "But it was the recent graduates who had a problem with it rather than the Old Ags."

 Scott said that in 1985 when she took her position on Corps staff as administrative sergeant and when she became a member of the Ross Volunteers (RV), she did not consider herself as a woman filling those roles but as a cadet.
 "I joined Corps staff because it was something I thought I could do," Scott said.
 "I also was thinking it would be neat to be an RV but not to be a female RV.

I wanted to do it because of what it embodied, not to be the first woman."
 Scott said that when she was named 1986-87 deputy Corps commander, the highest position a female has held in the Corps, people made it into a bigger deal than they should have.
 "The press hit on it," Scott said. "I wanted to talk to them because I knew it came with the job, but my buddies on Corps staff weren't getting any attention."
 "There was a certain tension. It was a big deal at the time, but I felt like I was just a cadet."

 Scott said despite hardships, her service in the Corps has always been a help.
 "When I graduated, there were opportunities awaiting me that I wouldn't have had if I hadn't been in the Corps," Scott said.
 "Now, when I'm up against something tough, I think 'remember when we went on that weapons run in RVs, and then I know I can do it."
