Elephant Walk symbolizes the senior class dying before the end of the football season. To mark that they will no longer be of use to the 12th Man, seniors march around campus and remember the good times they have had while at Texas A&M.

Newly constructed monument marks former governor's grave

AUSTIN — They wanted to remember him in death as he was in life. So, the first thing you notice about former Texas Gov. John Connally's recently erected cemetery monument is the commanding height. It's tall and strong, and the shiny black granite draws immediate attention.

"I wanted it to be (like) John Connally was, and I think maybe it is," said Nellie Connally, the former Texas first lady, who was married to Connally for 53 years. "It would be hard for me to describe John Connally without 29 adjectives. He was a very strong man, but he was a very compassionate one."

The grave of Connally, who died June 15, 1993, is under a live oak tree on a gentle hillside in the Texas State Cemetery in East Austin.

The cream-colored statue of St. Andrew, one of the 12 Christian apostles, was placed at the Connally monument by his family because it was one of his favorite works of art. The Connallys purchased the Victorian-era statue in London at an auction in the early 1980s. The 5-foot, weathered sculpture had been displayed in Westminster Abbey for about 100 years.

"They brought that statue down to the (Pflugerville) ranch, and Mother and Daddy just loved St. Andrew," said Sharon Ammann of Austin, Connally's daughter. "When Daddy declared bankruptcy, of course, St. Andrew had to go. It was close to the very last thing they took. Daddy patted him on the head and said goodbye."

The new Connally monument, which includes an obelisk, displays the three official seals of the top government offices held by John Connally. He served as Texas governor, 1963-69; U.S. secretary of the treasury, 1971-72; and U.S. secretary of the Navy, 1961.

The Connally family welcomes the public to view the monument.
