

Man's $800 million will honors hundreds of ordinary people

Millionaire's estate to be distributed to people he promised a more comfortable retirement

NEW YORK (AP) — It has been 30-odd years since Gregory Condolucci, an elevator operator, laid eyes on Milton Petrie. It turns out that neither man forgot. Petrie left the 85-year-old Con-dolucci $9,999.96 a year for life. Petrie, known in life — and now, in death — for his generosity, remembered hundreds of people, a few famous, most unknown, in his $800 million will.

"He got a big kick out of me," recalls the 85-year-old Condolucci, who operated the elevator at a New York City tennis club frequented by Petrie decades ago. "I always kidded him."

Petrie, 92, the down-to-earth son of a Russian immigrant pawnshop owner, died on Nov. 6. He built his fortune with a chain of women's clothing stores.

Petrie's will names 451 beneficiaries, including strangers he'd been helping since he read about them in the newspapers, and loyal employees whom he'd promised a more comfortable retirement.

He also provided generously for his own family members and for a few celebrities such as former Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek, writer Elie Wiesel and Marla Hanson, the model whose face was slashed on the street.

The value of his estate fluctuates with the stock market, but one of his lawyers, Jerome A. Manning, believes it's around $800 million.

"He said he never forgot where he came from," said Cordelia Fuller, whose son, transit policeman Robert Venable, was killed five years ago by a car thief. A dozen times, Petrie asked Fuller to bring Venable's daughter, Januari, now 15, to his office.

"He would give her teddy bears and a check," Fuller recalled. "He wanted to know about her progress in school. She was very crazy about him."

Under the will, Fuller, a nursing supervisor in Brooklyn, will receive $5,000 a year for life.

"It's nice what he did but I'd rather for him to be here," she said.

The will divides the beneficiaries into groups, each of which will be paid from the income of a particular trust. So in some groups, the beneficiaries get an odd amount. Condolucci, a widower, said he'll use his money to help his brothers, nieces and nephews. And he'll replace a couch, which was ruined in a flood.

"He always took care of me," Condolucci said. "I had polio. He paid for my two pairs of shoes. They were $50 apiece."

Ruth Dran, of Bayonne, N.J., was Petrie supervisor for 23 years.

After years of helping her boss make discreet financial arrangements for needy employees, she is getting $200,000 a year for the rest of her life. The money will help her move to Israel to be near her daughter and grandchildren.
