

Texas school celebrates 25th anniversary of civil rights protest

CRYSTAL CITY, Texas — Twenty-five years ago this Friday, hundreds of Crystal City High School students walked out of classes and into history.

Like Rosa Parks' decision to keep her seat in the front of that Montgomery, Ala., bus, the month-long boycott of this South Texas school system by Mexican-American students was a turning point in the civil rights struggle in Texas.

The walkout over how cheerleaders were selected gave birth the following year to La Raza Unida (The Race United) and set the stage for its election sweep of local political offices a few months later. La Raza remained a viable political group for less than a decade, but its statewide expansion in the early 1970s sliced into the Democratic Party's voter base and gave Texas Republicans a boost toward building a two-party state.

Many students who took part in that piece of history that unfolded here more than two decades ago remain today as adults in this small town alongside U.S. 83 about a two-hour drive south west of San Antonio.
