him immunity.

"We found out this did not originate with J.J. Ruffino," Hailey said. "He was asked to do it by the University."

If convicted, Hellriegel faces up to a year in jail and a $3,000 fine.

Hellriegel has worked for Texas A&M since 1975. He has served as interim dean of the College of Business and served as chair of the search committee that selected A&M's president Dr. Ray Bowen.

Two Texas A&M administrators, A&M Athletic Director Wally Groff and Associate Athletic Director Penny King, each were placed on three months probation and ordered to pay a $250 fine after pleading no contest in October to the same charge.

Groff and King entered the pleas as part of an agreement reached with Turner.

Both were given deferred adjudication, a form of probation that means no conviction will appear on their record if the three-month term is successfully completed.

All of the charges and indictments were the result of an ongoing investigation by the Texas Rangers and the FBI into questionable business practices at A&M.
