Aggies

they're shooting the ball well," Barone said. "I think they're underrated a little bit defensively."

"You can talk about how many points they score and that's always an issue, but I think defensively they're a pretty good team."

The Aggies face a daunting task in shutting down TCU's Kurt Thomas. The 6'9" center is the nation's leading rebounder averaging 13.8 boards a game and is second in the country in scoring with a 28.8 average.

"They have a premiere player in Thomas who gives them a lot of things in the middle beyond just being a scorer," Barone said. "He's a very good shot blocker and he's a good defender because of his size."

"He's in a system that allows him to play a little more free and run up and down the court the way he would like to play. He's a great player and a tough guy to stop."

Barone said that stopping Thomas is a priority, but TCU's potent outside shooting duo of Michael Thoele and Jeff Jacobs cannot go unchallenged either.

"Thomas is a guy that you have to focus in on, but I don't subscribe to the theory of letting him get his points and stopping everybody else," Barone said. "So, we have to do some things to keep him off rhythm and not let him get easy baskets."

"I don't think you can give this team three-point shots unmolested, either. Thoele and Jacobs can bury the three."

Freshman point-guard Kyle Kessel said beating TCU's full-court press is essential for an Aggie upset.

"I think we need to limit our turnovers under their press and play solid defense the whole way," Kessel said.

Barone believes his squad is ready to shine on the road.

"The kids have played hard and everyone's making a big deal out of whether you win or lose on the road," Barone said. "To win the championship in any league, you have to win road games, so I think we'll be prepared to play TCU."

Lady Ags

"I think we still need to improve in rebounding," Harvey said. "That is an area we should dominate because of our size (but), statistically we haven't done as well in that area as we should."

Another asset to the Lady Aggie game plan is the ability to substitute. The A&M bench has outscored the opposing bench in 13 of 16 games.

Sophomore Marianne Miller came off the bench last Saturday against Houston to lead the team with 26 points and six rebounds.

"Every night each player can step up and score the points," Miller said. "We have great shooters, so everyone can contribute. That night it just happened to be me."

Harvey agrees with Miller about the versatility of the team.

"We have quality players at all positions," Harvey said. "On any given night either a starter or someone on the bench can score a given amount of points like Miller did."

"So when people are sitting there doing scouting reports on us, they can't just worry about five people, they have to worry about almost 14."
