Confessed child murderer claims fulfillment of fantasy

Eric Nenno, who openly told officials of his desire for young girls, faces a capital murder sentence after committing sexual assault and murder.

HOUSTON (AP) — The confessed killer of a 7-year-old girl claims he fulfilled a fantasy when he sexually assaulted and strangled the child last week, authorities said Monday.

Eric Charles Nenno, 33, is charged with capital murder in the death of 7-year-old Nicole Benton, who lived about a block from his house in rural Hockley, about 35 miles from Houston.

Nenno was being held without bond at the Harris County Jail Monday, a day after officers discovered Nicole's body in his attic.

Detectives began questioning Nenno on Saturday on a suggestion from suspicious area residents who were part of a massive search. Nicole disappeared Thursday night while playing with friends in the Ranch Country subdivision.

Sheriff's department Lt. Bert Diaz said on Monday that authorities attempted to question Nenno late Thursday night, but no one answered the door at his house.

"Obviously, we could not force our way in because of the law, so we just kept coming back until finally we did get a response," Diaz said.

When officers questioned him on Saturday, Nenno almost immediately began talking about his desire for young girls, especially those ages 8-15.

But Nenno didn't confess to Nicole's death until after five or six hours of interrogation and two lie-detector tests, Diaz said.

"There is a little remorse, but not much," the detective said. "He was talking more about his fantasies and how he dreamed about doing this type of offense."

In his written confession, Nenno says he heard a country music band practicing in his neighborhood Thursday and began walking toward the sound. On the way, he passed Nicole, if he might play along with the band. The man and child then walked back to Nenno's house and he pulled her inside, Diaz said.

Nenno said he killed the girl within 15 minutes and expressed frustration that he couldn't finish assaulting her first, Diaz said.

In Hockley, counselors visited Roberts Road Elementary School where Nicole attended school. Principal Cathy Allen said school officials want to help the children understand what happened to the girl and overcome the trauma.

"We also want to reassure the boys and girls that this man is in jail and won't be able to hurt any of them," Allen said.

Senate debates education bill

The bill aims to restructure the no-pass, no-play rule, ease textbook approval, and increase the level of parental involvement.

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Senate Monday began considering an education overhaul bill that would ease the no-pass, no-play rule, loosen state control over schools and give parents more choice in where to educate their children.

"This will be the most major revision of the public education code in this state since the 1940s," said Senate Education Committee Chairman Bill Ratliff, R-Mount Pleasant.

"We must make a difference. The public, our educators and school children are depending on us to make a difference," Ratliff said.

Among the hottest issues is the proposal to change the no-pass, no-play rule, a key part of sweeping education reforms approved in 1984. The rule suspends failing students from extracurricular activities for a six-weeks grading period.

Ratliff's bill would allow a school district by board policy to cut a student's extracurricular suspension to three weeks the first time a student fails a class. Students could get one shortened suspension from extracurricular activities during junior high school and one during high school. They could practice or rehearse during the three-week suspension.

To ease state control, the bill would do away with State Board of Education approval of school textbooks. Instead, districts could buy any books they choose with state money.

The bill also would replace Texas Education Agency accreditation of school districts with a system in which the Education Board would issue different types of school district charters.

Those with "home-rule charters" — which would need approval of district voters — would have more freedom from state regulations in many areas, including structuring programs and length of the school day.

However, home-rule districts still would be subject to a number of basic regulations, including class size limits and the no-pass, no-play rule.

To allow parents more educational choices for their children, the bill would create a pilot program allowing some students to use tax money to pay private school tuition. Private schools accepting public money — or vouchers — would have to abide by some state requirements, such as skills testing.
