Attacker retried for 1993 stabbing of Seles

Seles' lawyers charge Guenther Parche with attempted manslaughter.

HAMBURG, Germany (AP) — Monica Seles' lawyers charged Thursday that the man who stabbed her during a tennis match was a "politically crazed fanatic" who had it in for the Serbs.

The description was in a summation at a retrial that could put Guenther Parche in jail for the attack two years ago.

Parche was given a suspended sentence after his first trial for the April 1993 stabbing of Seles that has taken the former No. 1 player out of competition.

The leniency triggered an uproar, and the prosecution won a retrial. Prosecutors want a 2 year, 9 month sentence for Parche.

Parche told police after his arrest that he stabbed Seles to open the way for Steffi Graf to become the world tennis No. 1. He also said it would hurt the "evil" Serbs. Seles is an ethnic Hungarian born in Serbia, part of former Yugoslavia. She has since become a U.S. citizen.

"Steffi Graf was the embodiment of the empire of good, Monika Seles the embodiment of the empire of evil," Gerhard Strate, one of Seles' lawyers, told the Hamburg court.

"This was not the deed of a loving fan. It was the deed of a politically crazed fanatic," he said.

Strate wants Parche convicted of attempted manslaughter, which carries a maximum jail term of 10 years.

That might not happen, because the prosecution is only pushing for a conviction on causing grievous bodily injury.
