HIV prevention conference to be held

The Race and Ethnic Studies Institute and the Brazos Valley Community Action Agency will focus their attention on HIV prevention among minority women during a conference April 6-7 at Texas A&M University.

The conference, "Reversing the Trend: Strategies for HIV Prevention Among Minority Women," will offer panel discussions, speakers and strategy planning sessions.

Some of the topics to be covered are: "Sexual Child Abuse, Culture and Vulnerability for HIV/AIDS," "Beyond AIDS 101: An Example of Participatory Learning," "Class, Race and Science: Implications for HIV Prevention in Women" and "HIV, Alcohol and Risk-Taking Behavior Among Minority Women."

Faculty senator determined by recount

A miscalculation in the counting of runoff ballots for Faculty Senate resulted in determining the wrong winner Tuesday. Olga Cook was elected Place 8 for the College of Liberal Arts.

The procedure for Faculty Senate voting calls for voters to rank their choices for senator from one to three. Only the first choice is counted unless a tie occurs, then the second choice is counted to break the tie.

It was in the counting of these second-choice votes that the error occurred.

Conference to teach sensitivity, leadership

About 200 peer educators and their advisers from universities across the southwest will be at Texas A&M April 6-8 for the first peer education conference.

The theme of the conference is "Unify and Empower: Making a Difference for the Future." Its goal is to teach the participants skills such as team building, cultural sensitivity, presentation style and leadership development. Speakers will include Dr. Barry Thompson, chancellor of the Texas A&M System, Randi Shade, a former peer educator and Andrea Prothro, a former Texas A&M health educator.

Senate endorses no penalty helmet

The law that requires people to wear head protection will have no enforcement provision.

AUSTIN (AP) — Under a bill tentatively approved by the Senate Wednesday, youths riding bicycles on public roadways would be required to wear protective helmets — sort of.

The bill by Sen. Judith Zaffirini, D-Laredo, requires that helmets be worn by juveniles under the age of 18, but it includes no penalties for violations, a situation that caused several senators to question why the measure was needed.

"Passing laws to make (people) law violators when you're not going to do anything to them anyway, it seems to me, is pretty superfluous," Sen. Don Henderson, R-Houston, said.

The Senate gave preliminary approval to the bill with a 19-10 vote. The bill's supporters characterized it as a health and safety measure.

"We believe this is a psychological tool and something that can help parents tell their children, 'Wear a bicycle helmet,'" Zaffirini said. "We believe that this will save people's lives."

She said many laws with no enforcement provisions exist on the state books.

"If this legislation only prevents one head injury, just one (to) just one child in this entire state, it's well worth our effort," said Sen. Mike Moncrief, D-Fort Worth.

Henderson, however, suggested that education programs would be a more effective way of encouraging children to wear bike helmets.

"I want everybody to be safe and healthy, and I would like goodness and happiness for the whole world for the rest of every-one's life, but I don't think I could realistically pass it to do that," he said.

Sen. Peggy Rosson, Paso, said the bill was in light of the Legislature's on teaching children they will face consequences for illegal actions.

"What kind of psychological message are we sending young people when we're passing a law which you do something but really against the law we're not going to enforce?" Rosson said.

Zaffirini said a strong did not have the support to come law. She pointed by Rep. Bill Carter, Worth, that would set for a bike rider of any using a helmet.

"It is still in committee, indicating it stood chance of passing. This only hope. If there's a that we can pass it will like this."

Endangered Species Act successfully delayed

Spending cuts cause Congress to call for a moratorium on the protection of species.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional Republicans' latest attempt to put the brakes temporarily on parts of the Endangered Species Act may prove successful.

House and Senate negotiators who Wednesday concluded their bickering over a $3.1 billion supplemental defense spending bill agreed to keep in the bill language that would freeze new Endangered Species Act protections, said Rep. Henry Bonilla, R-San Antonio.

With the Pentagon pressing urgently for the supplemental funding, the conference bill appears poised for rapid approval this week in both houses.

The money is needed to replenish Pentagon accounts used to pay for deployments to Haiti and elsewhere and President Clinton has promised deep spending cuts unless the bill is sent to his desk swiftly.

"The ESA moratorium is a top priority," said Bonilla, who as a defense supplemental conference fought to keep the freeze included in the House-defense spending measure.

"Some of my colleagues why this ESA language included in a defense appropriations bill," Bonilla acknowledged. "I reminded them that in being used against "ESA regulations have been used to curtail training exercises at some of our military installations."

in the bill.

Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison, R-Texas, last month successfully attached the moratorium language to the defense supplemental bill approved by the Senate. But the language faced a tenuous future in conference committee because unlike the Senate, the House has strict rules about what can be attached to appropriations bills.

The moratorium also wasn't in North Carolina have been embroiled in some Endangered Species Act difficulties behind the fountain darter and the added woodpecker respectively.

Thirty-nine of the Senate Democrats had fought Hutchison's moratorium, conferees to keep it out of a bill. They argued that would have "many negative unintended consequences."
