

ARF: Task force proposes MSC artwork diversity

Other artwork recommendations would add more artwork to the meeting rooms of the MSC and Rudder complex walls, which are virtually without artwork.

"We believe there is a great opportunity for the students of this university, and its staff and visitors, that is being missed to be educated because of this," the task force proposal said.

The task force recommended decorating these areas with murals depicting the campus' different student groups and cultures.

Patrick Conway, MSC Council president and member of the task force, said the task force also noted that although most students enter the MSC through the east entrance, the north side has all the information about the building's dedication.

"Twenty years ago, most students entered the building through the main entrance by the hotel desk," Conway said. "But now everyone enters from the east side because of Rudder, the Koldus building and how it's all arranged now."

"This entrance is kind of bland and empty. It would be a good idea to put something about the dedication there where most people enter."

Other recommendations include:

- placing a statue of Matthew Gaines, an African-American and former U.S. senator who helped found A&M, in the University Center.

- creating an updated text detailing the entire University

Center collection, the history of the holdings and their significance.

- advertising in The Battalion about additions and changes to the building or having trivia contests.

- reserving a wall in the MSC to recognize student accomplishments and organizations.

- placing video monitors around the University Center showing short clips of campus programs.

- adding a wall of traditions to the MSC where artist depictions of traditions can demonstrate to visitors what it means to have the human Aggie spirit.

- relocating the eight Medal of Honor winner plaques to one location where they would be centered around a description of the award.
