Lollapalooza lineup leaves lots to be desired

The lineup for Lollapalooza '95 has finally been announced on the festival's Internet network.

A good lineup? Yes. As good as it could be? Um ... no.

With Hole, Sonic Youth and Cypress Hill as the leading contenders for the headlining spot, the top of the bill is solid. But there are many bands that could probably make the festival an extraordinary one.

Nine Inch Nails is the most obvious one. From the success of The Downward Spiral and singles "Closer," "March of the Pigs" and "Hurt," it seemed Trent Reznor and the musicians he likes to call a band would've been a lock for the headlining position.

Even more startling is the omission of Live. If one band has become a radio staple in the past year, it's Live, with irresistible songs like "Selling the Drama," "I Alone" and "Lightning Crashes."

The band has the mass-market appeal and enough of a dedicated following to give the headliners a run for their money.

The inclusion of Sinead O'Connor, The Mighty Mighty Bosstones and Beck is curious at best. PJ Harvey, Oasis, Throwing Muses and Belly would have been much better choices.

But it's hard to question Lolla-ruler-supreme Perry Farrell. After all, along with creating a legendary band (Jane's Addiction) and the best touring rock festival in recent memory, Farrell is one of the most innovative and creative voices in music.

But the debate of Lollapalooza has always centered around the balance of music and money. Farrell insists the focus is providing the best cutting-edge music around.

And with past performers such as Rage Against The Machine, A Tribe Called Quest, Siouxsie & The Banshees and Ministry, Lollapalooza has accomplished that.

But those bands weren't the headliners, and those bands didn't make the money. Pearl Jam, Smashing Pumpkins, Red Hot Chili Peppers and the Beastie Boys took care of that.

It seemed this year would be no different as Farrell spoke of his desire to have Doggy Dogg as the headliner this year. "Snoop is what's happening," Farrell said in a Rolling Stone interview.

Aha. Snoop is happening. Well, so are Base and Boyz II Men, but something me they won't be appearing on Lollapalooza any time soon.

But Snoop fell through, which leaves with the big three — Hole, Cypress Hill and Sonic Youth.

It will be a pleasure to see these bands we can stay interested through the first leading up to their performances. I can't but think Beck and O'Connor will be snoozers, and I hope The Jesus Lizard and Pavement can keep the crowd's enthusiasm up until the big three hit the stage.

Music fans like myself will go to Lollapalooza, and I'm sure we will enjoy it. It's the best ticket of the summer.

And the second stage hasn't even been announced yet.

It just might be the main attraction.
