Supreme Court rules 1990 Gun-Free School Zones Act unconstitutional in a 5-4 decision

□ The ruling declared that Congress lacked authority to enact the law because it did not fall within its authority to regulate interstate commerce.

Principal Burl Whatley has encountered firearms on campus and even heard shots ring out during a recent lunch period, yet he's not exactly mourning the demise Wednesday of a federal law banning possession of a gun within 1,000 feet of a school.

Like other Texas school and law enforcement officials, Whatley said the statute thrown out by the U.S. Supreme Court was not necessarily a primary line of defense against guns.

"I don't know that we lost anything when we had that ruling, because I don't know that there was any prosecution under that," said Whatley, principal at El Paso's Coronado High.

Ruling 5-4 in a San Antonio case, the nation's high court said Congress lacked the authority to enact the 1990 Gun-Free School Zones Act because it does not fall within its authority to regulate interstate commerce.

The act "is a criminal statute that by its terms has nothing to do with 'commerce' or any sort of economic enterprise, however broadly one might define those terms," Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist wrote for the court.

States have the primary authority to enact and enforce criminal laws, the court said.

The decision denied the government's bid to reinstate a former San Antonio high school student's conviction for carrying a gun to school.

Alfonso Lopez Jr. said he was given the gun to deliver to someone else for $40 to use in what Lopez described as a "gang war" at Edison High School.

Existing state law makes it a third-degree felony for anyone but a licensed peace officer or security guard to possess a firearm or weapon on school property. Violators are imprisoned for two to 10 years.

"So we are not without protection," Austin police Sgt. Ken Cavett.

In fact, Cavett said officers in the gang and robbery unit could not recall having any cases come under the federal law.

Whatley said he also was not aware of the federal act being enforced, even though weapons have been found on campus and earlier this year, which gunshots were nearby during lunch.

"So I don't think there will be any change as to how business at Coronado School," he said.

"Sometimes the Supreme Court and the legislators have to sit down and say 'Let's do what's right for the children.' I'm definitely against the decision by the Supreme Court."

— Paul Strelzin,

principal of El Paso's Bowie High

"Sometimes the Supreme Court and the legislators have to sit down and say 'Let's do what's right for the children.' I'm definitely against the decision by the Supreme Court."

the time, said Wednesday that he doubts the high court's ruling will make much of a practical difference.

"It wasn't totally important because there are other gun laws. Obviously, we had state laws that said you couldn't bring your guns on campus," he told San Antonio radio station WOAI. "But it just gave it a little more weight, being a federal law. ... I'm concerned because we need all the tools we can get to help with discipline on the campuses."

Supreme Court and the legislators sit down and say 'Let's do what's right for the children,'" said Paul Strelzin, principal of El Paso's Bowie High. "I'm definitely against the decision by the Supreme Court."

C.W. Burruss, security director of Dallas Independent School District, noted that with one less law, some parents might feel their children are more vulnerable.
