Parents: Couple suprised by award announcement

seemed to embody the definition of Aggie Parents of the Year. "When I think of Aggie Parents of the Year, I think of a role model for 43,000 students," she said. "My parents' devotion to their family, God and education has always made them seem worthy of this type of honor."

Shirley Bilhartz said she was surprised when the award winners were announced. "When they called our names, it brought tears to my eyes," she said. "Hearing our names was quite a shock because we were expecting to see our daughter receive an award."

She said the entire Parents' Weekend was a wonderful experience, mostly because of the people.

"I was so pleased and impressed at the reception," she said. "We were overwhelmed by the number of hardworking and intelligent young people and their Aggie spirit."

The Bilhartz family know what they're talking about when discussing Aggie spirit. They own and operate the Duncanville-based J.R.B. Oil and Gas Co., which is housed in a maroon-and-white painted building. In addition, they also painted their oil field equipment maroon and white and operate maroon-colored company cars.

"We probably have two of everything pertaining to A&M," she said. "Everything is maroon and white from the company stationary to the building logo. My husband even drives a maroon car."

She said they are looking forward to a year of serving A&M in any way possible.

"We're very excited about representing A&M at different events," she said. "Even though we can't get a room, we're ready for Final Review. Although it's a good little drive to College Station and back, we'll do it for A&M."
