RAPE: Counseling centers stress help is always available

If a woman is a victim of rape and reports her crime, several actions will follow, Wiatt said.

The police will gather evidence at the crime scene, searching for personal items left behind by those involved in the crime and evidence to show the nature of the crime.

The victim will be transported to a hospital to undergo a "rape kit" examination, which will be paid for by the police department.

The police will take a detailed account of what happened to the victim.

As the police get leads on who may have committed the crime, the victim will be asked to look at photos of potential suspects.

If a suspect is found and arrested, the victim will be a participant in the trial.

Wiatt said it is also important for victims to know that they can retract their complaint and withdraw from the process at any time.

One positive thing to say to rape victims is that help is always available, Tomarelli said.

Individual counseling, group therapy and assistance from a rape crisis center are all helpful, she said.

Student Counseling Services has a psychologist on call 24 hours a day, and can be reached at 845-4427.

A peer counseling service also is open to students, which is can be reached at 845-2700.

This service is available from 7 a.m. to midnight weekdays, and 2 p.m. until midnight on weekends.

The Brazos Valley Rape Crisis Center, at 268-RAPE, offers free and confidential counseling and other referrals.

No matter how many precautions you take, something can happen to you, Moore said.

"Sometimes you may make unwise decisions or go somewhere unsafe," she said, "but you never, ever ask to get raped."

AGGIE BUCKS: Local businesses welcome debit card expansion

Noble contract have already begun.

Gaston said the plan for the initiation of a new Aggie Bucks program would involve defining the requirements for eligibility, receiving requests from interested local businesses, allowing qualified applicants to enter the program and initiating the mechanics of wiring local businesses into the Aggie Bucks program.

"We will expedite the process as rapidly as we can," Gaston said.

Taylor said that he is concerned about the prospect of the University controlling a larger Aggie Bucks program.

"If we have to start opening Aggie Bucks to all the establishments in the community," Taylor said, "we certainly wouldn't have the staff to accommodate such a large program."

Odgen said the bill came about in response to business demands for access to the Aggie Bucks system.

"The bill is a result of complaints from local businesses about the exclusion of their establishments from the program," Odgen said.

John Raney, owner of Texas Aggie Bookstore, said he spearheaded a group of local businesses who felt the bill was necessary to promote fairness and competition.

"We've been working on it for a long time," Raney said. "I believe it will be good for the students."

Brandye Willford, a senior animal science major, said he believes the new Aggie Bucks program would benefit students greatly.

"It will help when you're off campus and short on cash," she said, "you can whip out your Aggie Bucks and pay."

Other students noted the dangers of being asked to purchase goods and services off campus without their Aggie Bucks.

"It's a good idea," Chris Ficke, a senior electrical engineering major, said, "it's like a credit card, you get yourself in trouble."

Sergio Vega, a senior political science major, said that the new program has benefits.

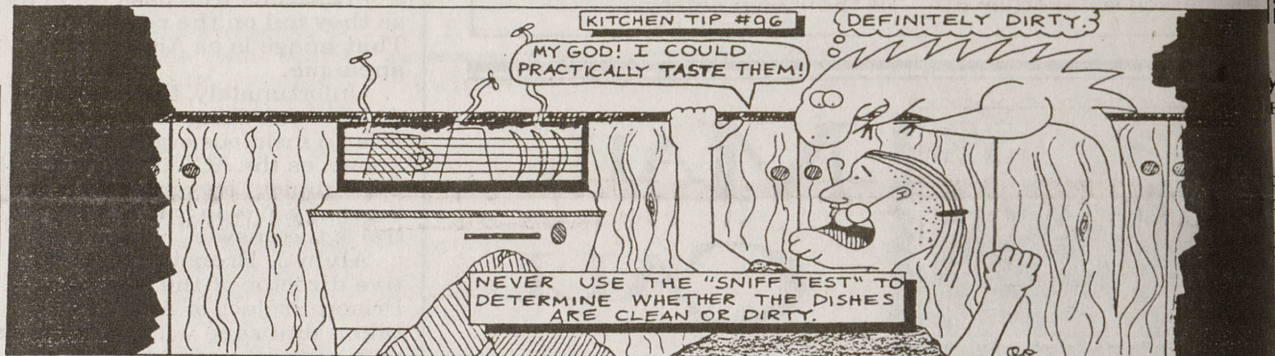

SALARIES: General use fee may be possible source for pay raises can be used for pay raises. The general use fee is a per credit hour and services facility projects such as Memorial Student Center expansion, Sterling C. E. Library expansion and construction of the George Presidential Library.

Gaston said that the University will look into the general use fee at a later time.
