NEWS BRIEFS

Summer fees due today

All students who have not paid their tuition and fees for the first term or 10-week summer registrations will be dropped from enrollment as of 5 p.m. today.

Students who are dropped for failure to pay fees will not be permitted to re-enroll for the first term or 10-week summer session. Registration and fee payment can be completed in the Pavilion.

Gov. Bush signs 'get tough' juvenile crime bill

ARLINGTON (AP) — Fulfilling a campaign pledge to get tough on violent youths, Gov. George W. Bush Wednesday signed into law an overhaul of the juvenile justice system that will keep teen criminals locked up longer.

"We listened to Texas and we delivered... tough love," Bush said after signing the bill during a ceremony at the Arlington YMCA.

Bush said the new law will help restore public confidence in the criminal justice system by combating the rising number of teens committing crimes.

UH system in 'disarray'

HOUSTON (AP) — An outside audit recommends University of Houston regents delay any plan to merge two top jobs because of the system's current disarray.

The report, commissioned by the Board of Regents, says the University of Houston System isn't ready to combine the jobs of chancellor and main campus president into a single chief executive officer. A three-member outside panel led by former Penn State University President Bryce Jordan wrote the report, which was distributed to faculty members Tuesday.

Mann set to die today

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — After hearing witnesses describe Fletcher Thomas Mann, jurors took less than two hours to send the Kentucky man to Texas death row. More than 13 years later, Mann was set to die early today for a 1980 murder spree in Dallas.

Attorneys for Mann, 34, appealed that his 13 years on death row already amounted to cruel and unusual punishment and that his case deserved a special review by the courts. The U.S. Supreme Court Tuesday rejected the arguments and lawyers said there would be no other appeals.

BILL: Gun law may bring problems from students carrying shotguns in their gun racks or placing semiautomatic handguns under their car seats," she said.

Toby Boenig, student body president, does not think that the new bill will harm students' safety on campus.

"We need to publicize the fact that it will still be illegal to carry weapons on campus, even after the first of the year," Boenig said.

Boenig is also concerned with improving the general safety of the campus.

"We always want to ensure student awareness, lighting and the presence of the University Police on campus," he said.

Wendy Smonko, a senior education major, said she opposed the new handgun bill and believes concealed weapons could make campus more dangerous.

"I feel safer knowing people don't have guns," she said.

Nick Carpino, a junior accounting major, said he believes everyone should have the right to carry a gun.

"With the two rapes we've had on campus," Carpino said, "it might help deter rapists who suspect the woman could be carrying a gun."

BOWEN: A&M faces 'bright future'

place up — it's mine."

Toby Boenig, student body president, said Bowen's willingness to interact with students is one of his strengths.

"He has opened his office," Boenig said. "I think Dr. Bowen wants to be the type of president that is always there for his students."

Suzanne Lyons, Residence Hall Association president, said that Bowen has been an exceptional president.

"A&M is a place with a lot of traditions and a certain way of handling things," she said. "I think it's sometimes hard to get settled here if you're not used to it."

But while he has had good times with his job, Bowen is serious when speaking about the recent cutbacks in admissions that have caused the University to turn away nearly 6,000 applicants.

"The worst part of this job is telling people they can't enroll," he said. "A byproduct of our success is that we have to limit our enrollment. That's very difficult."

The former A&M graduate and engineering professor is modest when rating his performance over the last year, but is quick to point out the successes of the teachers and the students.

"Our faculty has all kinds of national and international recognition and our students are always receiving awards," Bowen said. "There's so many of these in any one day that you get numbed by the great success."

Boenig pointed to Bowen's recent role in the state legislative session as an example of the president's success.

"He had to take a lot of flack you'd see that those problems have been corrected."

Bowen pointed to several signs that the University has a bright future.

"Our funded research is up," he said. "Our applicant pool for admissions is up. So I think the public understands that academically, this is a very solid place."

Lyons said that she sees a bright future for Bowen.

"I think that he's seen A&M and what being an administrator here is like," Lyons said. "I think now that he is settled, things will go even better."

Bowen said he sees long-range planning as the key to A&M's success. He said that dwindling funds from the state make good planning essential to A&M's future.

"We have to look at where we want to be in 20 to 30 years," he said. "Clearly, we want to continue to be the quality university we are now. I think we need to invest more in the core academics of the University, the faculty, the libraries, the academic equipment — as opposed to building new buildings and creating new programs."

"The state leadership also has to decide if they want Texas A&M to continue to be this world-class university," he added. "If they do, then the resources have to flow."

"... it seems like every time I almost get to the point that I wonder what a mess I'm in, something funny or exciting happens. It's an interesting mix of highs and lows."

up in Austin for things he wasn't involved in," Boenig said. "But he took them and then assured the Legislature that it wouldn't happen again. I think that shows his dedication to the University."

Bowen said that he thinks A&M has emerged from its year of controversy with little negative impact. He said many of the problems have risen from a small part of the University.

"The criticism we received has always been associated with a very narrow set of activities which are largely managed in finance and administration. When you look at the part of the University we're talking about, it's a very small piece. And I think if you were to go to that division,
