Rockets take rough road to repeat

Many of Houston's players say they don't get the respect of champions.

HOUSTON (AP) — The Orlando Magic proved their point by just getting to the NBA Finals. The Houston Rockets arrived carrying heavy baggage and after traveling a much harder road.

After what the Rockets have been through in the last year, it's no wonder they've swept through the finals with such ferocity. What's driving them is the memory of an NBA title that supposedly didn't count and a 32-year-old player who had fallen short every time he had a shot at a championship.

"We are one win away from definitely getting respect," swingman Mario Elie said Tuesday. "If we win the title back-to-back, teams are going to have to respect us."

If the Rockets complete a sweep of Orlando on Wednesday night, they will have done it in the toughest possible way — as a sixth seed and by beating the four best regular-season teams in the league. Three of those teams won 60 games.

"No one's ever done this before," Houston coach Rudy Tomjanovich said. "If we get this thing closed out, no one's played the 60-win team, no one's had to come from the sixth spot, no one's won as many road games."

What the series between the veteran Rockets and the youthful Magic has shown more than anything else isn't that you have to pay your dues. It's that the process of paying them makes you stronger.

Now Orlando knows. "We can take something from this," said John Gabriel, the team's vice president of basketball operations.

The Magic's talent has gotten them further than most thought. But talent, it seems, is no match for experience when the experience is not all happy memories.

The Rockets are still stinging from the heat that took in last year's finals for playing the New York Knicks' low-scoring, grind-it-out kind of game. As when they played it well enough to win, it was missed as a fluke.

"It's something I don't understand," Tomjanovich said. "We took on all the good teams last year. I know how hard it was, I know where we came from. I know the personnel we had. To come out on top of a great league and have people say it was a missed as a fluke."

The unpopular final was followed by the unpopular play of Otis Thorpe for Cliff Drexler, a deal even most of Rockets didn't like. And by time Houston got to the playoffs with all of 47 wins, the team found it had a lot to play for.

"It's been so much fun kicking all those doubters. Now they can't say anything," said Tomjanovich.

"It's been so much fun kicking all the doubters," forward Robert Horry said. "Now they can't say anything, because we weren't even posed to be here."

What the doubters didn't accomplish, Drexler's desire for a title did.

After missing an NCAA championship with the University of Houston and missing two chances at an NBA title with Portland, he has quietly picked up the Rockets every time they were in danger of hitting a lull. He's rebounded and led the fast-paced team behind the twentysomething Magic player surprised if he was not given an opportunity to make an NFL team. I think he'll make it."

It was not a surprise to Rucker that Biggens signed as a free agent.

"You don't have to run the ball 24 or 25 times a game to get noticed," Rucker said. "He played in every game on all the special teams. He's a talented person with a big heart that you cannot measure."

Slocum recommended Biggens to NFL scouts when they came to A&M last spring to see the Aggie seniors work out.

"When those people came to visit us, I told them they needed to look for him," Slocum said. "They got to meet him in person and work with him at our pro-workout day. He's got real good running ability, balance, speed and toughness."

Indianapolis is starting to become a sanctuary for former Aggie players. Besides Biggens and Groce, the Colts drafted former Aggie linebacker Jessie Cox, and have also drafted defensive lineman Lance Teichelman and linebacker Quentin Coryatt in the past three years.

Other former Aggies who have signed free agent contracts since the draft are defensive end Larry Jackson with the Denver Broncos, offensive tackle Jeff Jones with the Detroit Lions and tight end James McKeehan with the Seattle Seahawks.

"A lot of our players have come out and done well on a professional level," Slocum said. "Because of that, our program gets a lot of looks."

STEWART: QB comes home to play football. He said he remembered that A&M possessed a friendly atmosphere that he wanted to be a part of.

"A&M is a big school, but it doesn't seem like it," said Stewart. "Everybody is so friendly here, and everyone speaks to each other."

The 19-year-old, 6-foot-2-inch sophomore from Stephenville is not eligible to play during the 1995 football season because he transferred, but he is excited and optimistic about the opportunity to lead the Aggies when the 1996 season arrives.

Stewart said a year of not playing will give him the chance to adjust to the different playing styles of the Southeast and Southwest Conferences.

"(The SEC) has a crazy atmosphere where many of the games are just big-play games," Stewart said. "A&M football consists of more of a control-type offense with a great defense and a terrific coaching staff."

Stewart said he hopes to establish a more pass-oriented offense at A&M with the assistance of Offensive Coordinator Steve Enslinger.

"Coach Enslinger is very cooperative with the players," Stewart said. "He is focused on installing more passing, which will lead to bigger chunks of yardage for the team."

Since Stewart will be sitting this season out, he will have to watch his teammates from the sidelines. However, he expects great things from the Aggies during the 1995 season.

"I think we will definitely be undefeated," Stewart said. "As far as a national championship, that is left up to the voters. I know we have the potential to win it all because the team is focused and excited."

Stewart said he feels that the Aggies will be coming off of an extremely successful 1995 season. He hopes that will give the team a major boost for the inaugural season of the Big 12 Conference.
