Knoblauch, fan make amends

SEATTLE (AP) — Chuck Knoblauch has made up with a teen-age fan who said the Minnesota player roughed him up outside the Twins' hotel in Seattle, a spokesman said Sunday.

"The kid came to our hotel. Chuck and the kid sat down and apologized to each other. Then Chuck signed a couple of pictures for him. It was all a misunderstanding," Twins media relations director Rob Antony said.

Knoblauch, a Houston Belaire and Texas A&M product, was booed by Kingdome fans during Saturday night's 6-4 Seattle Mariners' victory over Minnesota in the Kingdome. He did not play Friday night.

Seattle police reported the 15-year-old fan admitted yelling an insult at Knoblauch, a second baseman and 1991 American League Rookie of the Year, after Knoblauch refused an autograph request outside the hotel Thursday night.

team, Richardson expects to find himself in a battle with free agent signee Chris Chandler for the Oilers' starting job.

"From what I've heard, and in talking to Oilers' people, I'm going into camp competing for the starting job," Richardson said. "With Cody (Carlson) gone, the position is pretty much up for grabs."

Richardson said he is not worried about his future with the team, despite the drafting of McNair, who is viewed as the future of the Oilers' franchise.

"I could have gone to Canada a couple of years back (and played in the CFL), but I wanted to stay in Houston," Richardson said. "I figure any experience I get playing is good experience, and I'll deal with each situation as it comes along."

GEORGANDIS

The same scenario has detailed Strawberry's last few years. He and fellow phenom Dwight Gooden had drug trouble while with the New York Mets in the mid-'80s, but came back to lead their team to glory. After returning home to the Los Angeles Dodgers as a free agent, Strawberry was released when he tested positive for drugs again.

He was picked up by San Francisco and helped the Giants overtake the Dodgers in the National League West last year until the strike hit in August. Testing positive again, he was released by the Giants, re-rehabilitated and signed Sunday by the apparently ignorant Yankees.

The repeated comebacks by these players exposes the weakness in baseball's drug policy — baseball would rather have tainted stars than no stars at all.

This policy stems back to the very beginning of baseball's drug problem, which first reared its head in 1980.

That year, Players Association Director Ken Moffet said that as many as 40 percent of major league players might be drug abusers. In a league with 28 teams, that meant approximately 315 players could have been breaking the laws of the country and the sport on a regular basis.

As the 1980s moved on, players began getting in trouble with the law and being suspended from the game for drug use. Howe's first incident occurred in 1983 when he was suspended from the Dodgers for using cocaine.

The biggest incident occurred in 1985 when two Pittsburgh-area drug dealers named 17 major league players as buyers. Included in the list of names were such star players as Dave Parker and Keith Hernandez.

Then-Commissioner Peter Ueberoth tried to clean up the game by forcing all players to submit to periodic drug tests, but his plan was rejected by the Players Association, which said the issue must be addressed through the collective-bargaining procedure.

Nevertheless, Ueberoth suspended the accused players, and forced them to donate up to 10 percent of their salaries to charities. With all this behind the game, Ueberoth announced at the beginning of the 1986 season that the drug problem was solved.

Nine years later, it is clear that he was wrong. Strawberry joins a Yankee team that is dead last in the American League East, a far cry from last year's powerhouse that was running away with the division title before the strike. Strawberry may be the player the Yankees need to turn their season around. He is 33 years old, but still has some of his awesome power and speed that made him the best player in the National League in the late 1980s.

That's all well and good, but the fact remains that Strawberry should not be playing, no more than Howe or the Dallas Mavericks' Roy Tarpley should. They all broke the rules, made a mockery of the games they represent and then wormed their ways back into them.

In life this is not acceptable nor is it in business. When you throw out the emotion, the camaraderie and everything else about sports, it is a business. Baseball needs to change its drug policies before any more damage is done.
