

SHOTS: Project aims to increase immunization rates

 children under the age of 5 who may not be getting proper medical attention, he said.
 Suzy Griswold, program coordinator for the Children Immunization Education Initiative, said the project, which will be completed by the end of the summer, will investigate the current immunization rates in the Brazos Valley.

Researchers will examine the immunization records kept by area schools to determine when children received their first shots, she said.
 Rodana Christian, spokeswoman for the Brazos Valley Health Department, said the current project is an extension of the Shots Across Texas project, an immunization campaign initiated by Texas two years ago to help improve childhood immunization rates.

"The Healthsmart Coalition was given a grant to further the work begun by the Shots Across Texas project," Christian said. "Our hope is to bring the immunization rate from 55 percent to 90 percent."
 Rhonda Fannin, an immunization outreach nurse for the Brazos County Health Department, said one goal of the project is to find out why parents wait so long to get proper shots for their children.

"Although many immunization programs exist, there are still many problems," Fannin said.
 Fannin said that children need immunization shots by the time they are 2 years, but most children do not receive their shots until they are rolled in school.
