OLSEN: No-hitters, superstars highlight history

Aggie pitchers have thrown four no-hitters at Olsen Field, including one by Thurmond in the inaugural season of Olsen Field in 1978. A more recent memorable performance came from Granger, now a minor-leaguer with the Kansas City Royals, when he struck out 21 batters against Lubbock Christian in 1993, his All-American season.

Despite the many impressive pitching performances the Aggies have compiled over the years, Johnson, who has been A&M's head coach since 1985, said his favorite Olsen Field memory came courtesy of one of the Aggies' best hitters.

"John Byington hitting two home runs in the bottom of the ninth against Texas in 1989 to win both games was amazing," Johnson said. "That '89 team had some unbelievable comebacks and thrilling moments."

The Aggies won the two games 18-14 and 8-5, after the Longhorns had taken the first game of the series and broken A&M's 28-game home-winning streak that season. Byington would go on to hit .442 that season, the second-highest average ever at A&M, and drive in a school-record 89 runs.

Led by Byington and current-Minnesota Twin in Knoblauch, the 1989 Aggies defeated Texas twice in the SWC Tournament at Olsen Field to host the Central Regional. They then lost to Louisiana State 5-4 in the championship game to fall a game short of the College World Series.

Along with Knoblauch, such future stars as Roger Clemens, Doug Drabek and saw action at Olsen Field while in college.

Johnson said the best thing about Olsen Field is that it keeps the players coming to A&M.

"Recruiting has been our key to success," Johnson said. "We have a good product to sell. We can point out A&M's academics, tradition and loyalty, and we have a great facility."

Magic may rejoin Lakers

□ The three-time MVP said Los Angeles has asked him to return.

LAHAINA, Hawaii (AP) — The Los Angeles Lakers want Magic Johnson back, and Johnson may be interested.

"The Lakers have asked me to return," he said in Tuesday's editions of The Honolulu Advertiser. "We're talking about it, so we have to see what happens. It's nothing that's definite yet."

Johnson has previously hinted he may want to rejoin the NBA, but this is believed to be the first time the Lakers have publicly said they are considering such a move.

The Los Angeles Lakers great, now part-owner of the NBA team, twice retired since announcing in 1992 he has the AIDS virus.

Johnson ended a comeback bid after some players said they were worried about possibly contracting the virus should he spill blood while on the court.

Johnson, who turns 36 next month, was in Maui for his annual fantasy camp, along with Lakers general manager Jerry West. West, who also spoke with the Honolulu Star-Bulletin of a possible return, said times of attitudes about AIDS had changed since Johnson last attempted a comeback.

"I think the decision he made four years ago to retire was a decision I think he regrets," West said. "Now there's a lot more information about health concerns that I think is easier for him to make a decision today."

The Lakers will hold the training camp in Hawaii in the fall, if the lockout ends. Until then, the Lakers will be barred from signing Johnson to a player contract, Johnson said he decides to play, would have to give up his ownership rights to the team.

Johnson played from 1979-1992, leading the Lakers to five NBA titles and winning three-time MVP awards. He starred on the Dream Team that won the gold medal at the 1992 Barcelona Olympics.

GEORGANDIS: Off-the-field troubles doom superstar

That season, Cedeno showed how much he had learned, leading the league again in doubles, bashing 22 home runs, stealing 55 bases and compiling a .320 batting average. His .537 slugging percentage (the measure of a player's extra base hit prowess), remained an Astro record until Jeff Bagwell broke it in 1994.

He became the first player in major league history to hit 20 home runs and steal 50 bases in the same season. He would duplicate that feat in each of the next two seasons. The Astros had their best season to date in 1972, going 84-69 and taking second place in the NL West.

During his breakout season, Cedeno began to draw comparisons to Willie Mays and Roberto Clemente. The scouts said he had tremendous all-around skills. He was equally talented at hitting the ball, running the bases and making the plays in the field. But the off-season of 1973 was not kind to Cedeno. Although he was not convicted, he was implicated in the murder of a young girl in his home country. In interviews in later years, former teammates said they noticed changes in Cedeno; he had difficulty concentrating and didn't work as hard in practice.

Although he still put up gaudy numbers in 1974, it was noticeable that Cedeno's game had slipped. His average dropped to .269, and he didn't hit over .300 again until 1980. The Astros stuck with Cedeno throughout the '70s, adding fine outfielders Jose Cruz and Terry Puhl around him to pick up the offensive slack.

Cedeno did hit .309 in 1980 and stole 48 bases as the Astros won their first divisional crown. But his production had slipped drastically since those first wonderful four years. He never reached 20 home runs again in a season, and was often injured during crucial times in the season.

Matters worsened for Cedeno in 1981 when he went into the crowd at St. Louis' Busch Stadium to fight a fan (seems to be a trend for Houston sports figures). The Astros released Cedeno after the regular season.

He was picked up by the Cincinnati Reds and played parts of four seasons with them, then played the tail-end of the 1985 season for the Cardinals. He played in his first World Series in 1985, but the Cardinals lost to the Royals in seven games, and Cedeno hit just .133.

He played 37 games with the Los Angeles Dodgers in 1986, was released by the organization and decided to retire. He was 35 years old. He tried out with the Astros again in 1990, but was cut. Despite his troubles, Cedeno remains 21st on the all-time stolen base list with 550, and has a .285 lifetime batting average.

Perhaps the most telling thing about Cesar Cedeno is where he falls in the all-time major league player registrar.

Cedeno's story is similar to another former Astro, Andujar Cedeno (no relation), A.C., who was traded to the San Diego Padres during last off-season, but with Houston at age 21.

The young shortstop was said to possess all the tools, but also seemed to lack a solid work ethic. He made tremendous plays at shortstop, but also ridiculous errors. He hit home runs farther into the Dome's stratosphere than any one shortstop before him, but he also struck out way too often to be an effective hitter.

The Astros stayed with Andujar for just three seasons before giving up and trading him. Perhaps if Houston had tried the same thing with Cesar, instead of ignoring his problems, both sides could have avoided a lot of pain.
