their units are at any given time because they are not on a computer dispatch program," Humphreys said.

The Bryan and College Station computer systems are capable of tracking their emergency vehicles around town.

Scott agreed that this could be a potential setback in negotiations for University EMS involvement.

"We are not fully automated like the city is," he said.

A mutual aid agreement, which is different than an automatic mutual aid agreement, has existed for several years between the four agencies operating ambulances in Bryan-College Station. Texas Emergency Medical Services and University Emergency Medical Services participate in the mutual aid program.

Within this program, if one of Bryan and College Station's four ambulances is unavailable during an emergency, the call goes to Texas EMS and then to University EMS.

Humphreys said operations will continue in this order.

Ervin Cox, vice president of Texas EMS, said it makes sense for his service to be considered as only emergency backup for the more advanced city departments.

"We don't have the same level of training," he said. "We are primarily a transfer service. We rarely run 911 calls."

Cox said that University EMS probably cannot provide the fastest possible response time because it is run by student volunteers.

Volunteers can take between 10 to 40 minutes to respond to a call, Cox said, but a professional is out the door in less than a minute.

However, Scott said University EMS student volunteers provide services of the same quality as the city.

"Our experience level might be different, but the level of training is the same," he said. "The fact that we are volunteers doesn't affect how fast we get to the ambulance."

region," Dugas said.

"It may provide an alternative to some things they are planning to do like restricting water supplies and interbasin transfers (transferring water supply from one basin to another)."

Dr. Ronald Griffin, an A&M professor of agricultural economics, received a $39,000 grant to research the value and management of water supplies.

Griffin's team is studying Texas communities undergoing drought conditions and investigating how people value a reliable water supply.

"The motivation behind the project is that water is increasingly getting scarce," he said. "In the future, it will not be possible to supply all the water that is needed."

The third project, which was awarded a $50,000 grant, will study how water is managed in the Edward's Plateau region during a drought year and brainstorm ways to manage the water efficiently.

The primary investigator is Dr. Bruce McCarl, an A&M agricultural economics professor, who said water management is an important problem facing the Texas citizens.

"It is good to see the Texas Water Development Board getting involved with the problems," he said. "They have been able to tap some pretty knowledgeable people and as a result, some good work will be done."

NEWS BRIEFS

Third faculty member awarded Fulbright grant

A third Texas A&M faculty member has recently been honored as a recipient of a Fulbright grant.

Suzanne D. Gyeszly, a professor of Sterling C. Evans Library and collection development coordinator for social sciences and preservation, was awarded the grant to research and travel abroad. Gyeszly will lecture and conduct research at the National Szechenyi Library in Budapest, Hungary, during Fall 1995.

Dr. Gerald Keim, professor of management, and Dr. Clarissa Kimber, professor of geography, have also received Fulbright grants.

Erin sinks gambling ship; three feared dead

PATRIOT AIR FORCE BASE, Fla. — Eight sailors managed to escape sinking gambling ship in seas whipped into 20-foot swells by Hurricane Erin. Three others — the captain, cook and crewman — weren't as lucky.

Coast Guard cutters and aircraft searched Wednesday for the missing crew members of the 234-foot Club Royale, a gambling ship that 90 miles northeast of Cape Canaveral.

The eight survivors escaped in inflatable life rafts aboard the ship and were plucked to safety by four Coast Guard helicopters and a passing ship. The Coast Guard said at least seven of the sailors were wearing life jackets.

One sailor almost didn't make it, said Coast Guard diver Clark Everson. "This huge — we're talking about — wave slams him," Everson said. "He goes to the other side of the raft. I thought he was going in the water."

Croatia demands Serbs to abandon their resistance

ZAGREB, Croatia (AP) — Croatia sued a thinly veiled ultimatum to Serbs on Wednesday, saying they must abandon their resistance or face attack from 100,000 troops.

"Your time has almost expired," said Croatian government official Petar Prizmić in an open letter to the residents of the rebel Serbs' self-proclaimed capital.

Croatian government officials said Serbs were to meet in Geneva Thursday for talks. But Croatia has made clear it will accept nothing less than the Serb agreement to submit to Croatian government rule. Serbs, who seized one-third of Croatia in a six-month war in 1991, have vowed never to yield.

Tired of waiting for the United Nations to reintegrate the Serb-held lands, Croatia has been warning for months it will use force if necessary to accomplish that goal.

Croatia has mobilized 100,000 soldiers for a possible attack on the rebel Serbs, who have 50,000 men ready for battle, U.N. spokesman Chris Gunn said Wednesday. Those numbers match independent estimates.
