A&M welcomes freshmen at Scholarship Convocation

□ The Office of Honors Programs and Academic Scholarships hosted the event for freshmen scholarship recipients.

Freshman academic scholarship recipients were welcomed to Texas A&M yesterday at the 1995 Academic Scholarship Convocation and challenged to set high goals.

This year 700 freshmen, who have each been awarded a 4-year academic scholarship, were invited to the convocation organized by the Office of Honors Programs and Academic Scholarships.

Dr. Sallie Sheppard, associate provost for undergraduate programs and academic services, said the convocation is the culmination of 18 months of recruiting.

"It is one of the most exciting events of the new school year because in one room we have all of the holders of the prestigious 4-year scholarships," Sheppard said.

In attendance were recipients of President's Endowed Scholarships, President's Achievement Award Scholarships, Terry Foundation Scholarships, Lechner Scholarships, McFadden Scholarships and Aggie Spirit Award Scholarships.

Dr. Dale Knobel, executive director of the honors program, said the purpose of the program is to introduce the scholarship students to each other, to congratulate them and to inform them of their responsibilities as scholarship holders.

"We simply want to say, 'Remember, you have earned this, but it is a privilege that many students don't have,'" Knobel said. Dr. Ray Bowen, Texas A&M president, offered welcoming remarks and a message to freshmen scholarship students.

Other speakers were Patrick Conway, Council president; Dr. Robert Walker, vice president for development; and Nancy Joe D. associate dean of the College of Liberal Arts.

Conway, a scholarship recipient himself, he spoke to the freshmen about setting and reaching high goals.

"I'm going to give them some help about being successful," he said.

He said scholarship recipients have an opportunity to be involved in student activities because they often do not have to work through school.

"By virtue of getting the scholarship, they have a responsibility to give back."

Part of the program was devoted to ing the rules for keeping scholarships, remaining a full-time student and maintaining a minimum mandatory grade-point ratio.

This year's University Scholars, a group of sophomores and juniors who qualify for additional scholarship money during their freshman year, were also announced at the convocation.

Sheppard said these students were last year's freshmen scholarship recipients.
