

HEALTH CENTER: Revenue will be used to hire two additional doctors, Isdale said

"This is advice, based on medical knowledge," she said.

Isdale will use the revenue from canceling the after-hours care to hire two additional doctors for the health center.

Kibler estimated that the new doctors, combined with an extra hour of daytime service, will allow the health center will serve 200 more patients a week.

Chris Nelson, a representative of the Interfraternity Council and a senior accounting major, said the money-saving measure was wise, but he feared that some students may be forced to pay for medical care they could receive for free at the health center.

"I think it's good that we're saving money," Nelson said. "My only concern is in the gray areas, like an international student who needed to get treatment that they could before get free at the health center but now would have to go to a hospital and spend money."

David Washington, Student Government executive vice president for administration, said he was glad Kibler explained the changes so students could understand the administration's reasoning.

"I think it's a very good idea to bring the students up-to-date on these changes," Washington said.

Kibler said that even though the after-hours care has been dropped for the time being, it may be restarted if students demand it.

"We may go back [to 24-hour care] if the students tell us to go back," he said.

"But right now, we want to focus on the quality of our care. Then we can say, 'This is what we can do. These are possible expansions.'"
