Mariners stun Yankees in 11-inning thriller

Edgar Martinez's two-run double lifted Seattle into the AL Championship Series.

SEATTLE (AP) — The Seattle Mariners, the team that could not win for nearly two decades, now just cannot lose.

Edgar Martinez hit a two-run double in the 11th inning Sunday night, capping one of baseball's best comebacks ever, and sent the Mariners over the New York Yankees 6-5 to win a classic, decisive Game 5 of their AL playoff series.

Ken Griffey Jr., whose playoff-record fifth homer began an eighth-inning rally that tied it, scored from first base on Martinez's ball into the left-field corner, sliding home with the winning run.

"All the hard work we did finally paid off for us," Griffey said.

Randy Johnson won in relief as Seattle won for the fourth time in a week when a loss would have meant the end of its season. The Mariners became only the fourth team to overcome a 0-2 deficit in a five-game series, and the first since San Diego beat Chicago in the 1984 NL playoffs.

The Mariners, in the postseason for the first time in their 17-year history, begin the best-of-5 AL championship series against Cleveland on Tuesday night at the Kingdome.

Jack McDowell, making his first relief appearance in the majors, was the loser. He escaped jams in the ninth and 10th, but could not hold a 5-4 lead in the 11th after a go-ahead single by Randy Velarde off Johnson.

Joey Cora opened the inning with a bunt single, barely eluding first baseman Don Mattingly's tag, and took third on Griffey's single.

DEFENSE:

"Now we're like dang, are we really as good as we're supposed to be. We come into a big game like this and we just don't perform like we're supposed to."

With the loss at Tech, the Aggies fell to No. 22 and fifth place in the conference.

Slocum said that the SWC race could turn out to be an interesting one.

"There are no guarantees for anyone at this point," Slocum said. "Tech has demonstrated that they can beat us and I'm sure that this will give encouragement to everyone else. Perhaps we've read too much about how many games we've won or how easy it is. We may need to go back and evaluate and start worrying about whether we can beat anybody."

The Tech game left Aggie fans wondering what is wrong with the Aggies. After all, losing is not something that they have had to deal with often.

Slocum said, "I wish there was a simple one line answer and I could say this is what's wrong, but when you lose games it's never that simple."

With 30 seconds left in the game, Corey Pullig threw a pass that should have moved the Aggies down the field on their way into field goal position. Instead it landed in the arms of All-American middle linebacker Zach Thomas, who ran it in for the game winning touchdown.

Thomas' defensive touchdown handed the Aggies their second loss in a row, something that hasn't happened since 1988, and ended their Southwest Conference win streak at 29 games.

"They say that there is a first time for everything," Coach Slocum said. "I guess that held true. It was a disappointment; we're not accustomed to this. I have to give Tech credit. I thought they did a great job fighting through out the ball game. They made the plays they had to make to win the ball game."

While Tech made the plays offensively, the big plays for the Aggies came from the defense.

Former lesbian activist

"Being lesbian wasn't an issue for me. I was happy. But then someone changed my life forever."

"Having a lesbian identity was the best thing that had happened to me...I'd been rejected by men...ridiculed all my life for being a tomboy. I was angry about being treated as "different" from other girls, tired of the pain of rejection...I mean, as soon as I learned what 'homosexual' meant, I knew that was me. I had no interest in men...and it just felt so natural, so I acted on it. As a lesbian, it was great to finally have an identity that fit. I loved being gay...but down deep inside, I wondered if living like this was right. Of course, I didn't think there was any way out...I mean, I was born this way, right? So why did I feel the doubt? When I let Christ into my life, He opened my eyes to a love I had never experienced before, but had always wanted. I learned how He had a different purpose for my life...and saw how His unconditional love helped me to heal the pain I'd covered for so long...I really thought I belonged before, but believe me, there's no better life than being with God."

There is another way out.
