Shenkir reception to be held today in MSC

A reception will be held for Dr. William Shenkir, a candidate for Texas A&M's executive vice president and provost position, at 201 MSC today from 4:30 - 6 p.m.

Students, faculty and staff members interested in meeting Shenkir are welcome to attend.

Shenkir is the second of four candidates that will interview on campus.

Trial of accused murderer of Selena begins today

HOUSTON (AP) — Harris County Courthouse personnel are bracing for a storm of Selena followers Monday as the suspected slayer of the Tejano music superstar goes on trial.

"What I'm hearing from the Spanish media is this is their O.J.," said Janet Warner, one of the courthouse coordinators. "They're treating this like the O.J. trial."

Security is at its highest level ever with extra police patrols expected in and around the courthouse where Yolanda Saldívar will be tried for the March 31 murder of Selena Quintanilla Perez, known simply by her fans as Selena.

"It's the tightest I've ever seen," said Jack Thompson, administrator of the district courts in Houston. "There is extra security because a high profile case like these demands this."

Saldívar, 35, is accused of gunning down Selena, her former employer, as the two met at a Days Inn motel to discuss the transfer of business records.

AIESEC

throughout Europe, South Africa and China.

Sally Coleman, the first A&M student to travel abroad as an AIESEC intern, worked in Ireland last year for Guinness Beer.

Amy Cochran, an AIESEC member and senior German major, said that when Coleman arrived in Ireland, she did not have the proper work permit papers. Irish customs officials were hesitant to allow her into the country until she mentioned she was an AIESEC member.

"They stamped her permit and let her in," Cochran said.

Another story of AIESEC influence, often recounted at AIESEC conferences, is how the Ayatollah Khomeini, the ruler of Iran, invited the Iranian AIESEC chapter to a personal conference with him in 1979.

When the students arrived, Khomeini ordered his soldiers to kill them.

Nelms said this story shows that Khomeini felt threatened by the students' international business activities.

"He ordered his soldiers to kill them all because he was afraid of what AIESEC was doing to the mentality of the youth in his country," he said. "I think that people who are close-minded, like a dictator, are threatened by us because we are open-minded and are changing the world."

A&M AIESEC members will receive an intern from Monterey Tech, in Monterey, Calif. in November. This student will work for GMAC in Dallas.

In December, a student from France will arrive for an internship at International Marketing Agency in Arlington, Texas.

AIESEC members are trying to make an intern match for other companies who contract AIESEC services. One company wants an intern from Mexico the other from Switzerland.

Although all AIESEC members hope they will eventually be sent abroad as interns, Fuenes and Nelms said there are membership benefits.

"If I could never go on an internship, I'd still be in the organization," Fuenes said.

There are numerous opportunities to work and train with corporate executives.

Nelms said the poise and confidence he has developed because of AIESEC activities will give him an edge when he applies for jobs.

"I've sat across the table with company executives many, many times," he said. "Interviewing with a job recruiter will be a breeze."

Fuenes said another benefit is the unique bond that exists between AIESEC members from around the country and the world.

"We sing the same songs, play the same dumb games," he said. "It's our own little culture. I would compare the AIESEC bond to the bond we have with others graduating from Texas A&M."

CLINTON

he had to stop real violence when Roger Clinton threatened to kill Kelley.

Looking back on his childhood, Clinton said, "There are two or three bad things that happened. Number one, I was deprived of a male role model. I grew up with this idealized version of my own father who died before I was born. I loved my stepfather very much, but he was rarely — not never, but rarely — engaged in my life. I can count, on one hand, the number of things we did together — the times he took me hunting or fishing, or into the woods to cut a Christmas tree, or to a baseball game in St. Louis.

"I tell you, I remember every one of them because there were so few."

The second thing, Clinton continued, was how it affected his views on marriage and family. Given his background, Clinton doubted his own ability to have a successful marriage.

"I wanted it desperately but I did not know if I could do it," Clinton said. "When I was 21, I put down the things I really wanted in my life — and having a good family life and a child was one of them. But I just didn't know if I could ever get there, because if your model of a marriage has been bad, it has a subconscious drag on you."

"The third thing that happens when you grow up in a dysfunctional home is that, inadvertently, you send mixed signals to people," Clinton said. "You learn that other people, in the outside world, didn't live in the same context as you. I see this as president. I don't believe in psychobabble — you can overdo all that — but I think I have to be aware that I grew up as a peacemaker, always trying to minimize the disruption."

"When you are president and go the extra mile, others will interpret it as weakness. In Haiti, I pretty much had to invade the country because people didn't believe me. When I finally had the planes in the air, they believed me and got out of there. That's happened all my life, from the time I was in school. People underestimate your resolve because you go out of your way to accommodate them before you do the hammer."
