

ELECTION

the office." While Berger was willing to campaign further, she and several other candidates said they should not have had to run again because of their majority wins in the primaries.

Berger and Kelly both had at least 20 percent more votes than the runner-up in the first election.

Kelly said candidates who win by a certain percentage should not have to take part in a runoff.

Yet, Colby Cessnum, who ran against Kelly in the primaries, likes the runoff set-up.

"The set-up is unique," Cessnum said. "It helps decide who the best person for the job is because it doesn't divide the vote."

Jodi Morris, a freshman general studies major, agreed with Cessnum.

"I think the runoff makes it more fair for all the candidates because it is the final result that counts," Morris said.
