how the book as a whole will be received by the students.

Shea Snyder, a senior agricultural economics major, said she likes the cover.

"I think the new cover is nice," Snyder said. "I liked the more traditional covers, but this one isn't bad."

Students who ordered the Aggieland while registering for Fall 1994 classes can pick up their annuals at the window of the annex. Those who ordered an annual in Spring 1995 or want to buy one by check can go to the double doors of the Annex. Students who want to purchase an Aggieland by cash or credit should go to 230 Reed McDonald Building.

original Student Senate proposal. She said some senators desire to rewrite the Student Senate bill, taking into consideration current student opinion on the cultures requirement.

"We believe that it is very possible and probable that Dr. Bowen will take a position on the issue next semester," she said. "We would like to give him the most current opinion we can."

After presentations of each bill, the floor was opened for debate.

Stephen Kindrick, an urban planning graduate student, urged the Student Senate to act as a trustee for future students and make a decision soon.

"I think it's your job as senators to give or take a stand, 'Yes, we want them,' or 'No we don't' — not to say, 'We need more time to research it,' he said. Now is the time for action, not some time in the future."

Jesse Czelusta, a sponsor of the repeal bill and a senior animal science major, said the Student Senate should repeal its bill because it was hastily drafted and poorly researched.

"It is my definite feeling that senators were not educated on this bill on the current Student Senate proposal when they voted for it two years ago," he said. "They wanted to get something out on the table, and they did it fairly quickly."

Some students, however, said current student opinions should not be considered important.

Ferleshare Starks, a senior zoology major, said the Student Senate should not be obligated to solicit opinion from current students.

"At this rate, every year somebody's going to say 'We don't have the input of the students who are here now,' and [the bill] will never get passed," she said.

Other students questioned the right of students to influence opinion.

Cheezz Washington, NAACP president and a senior computer engineering major, said student opinion should have no influence on the University curriculum.

"I don't understand why the students have decided it's their position to decide what is to be implemented," he said. "I would rather not take class, but I don't think anyone here should decide what classes they should have to take."

Bigbee said that if the Student Senate proposal were now in effect, 93 percent of current students would already fulfill the cultures requirement.

Raymond Boney, a senior speech communication major, said repealing the existing bill would waste time and money.

"A repeal and then a redraft would really be senseless," he said. "This thing should have passed a long time ago. The Student Senate and Faculty Senate should go ahead and take a stand and do this over with."

Boenig, a senior agricultural development major, commended the Student Senate for its efforts. He was disappointed with the turnout of 50 students.

"I think the Student Senate did everything they could to get as many people out there as possible," he said. "I just wish more people would have shown up."

Three witnesses testify that Saldivar shot Selena

HOUSTON (AP) — Three men and one woman testified Thursday they were startled by a loud noise and saw wounded Selena run outside the motel as she was pursued by a man with a handgun.

Trinidad Espinoza, 55, identified the woman with the gun as Yolanda Saldivar, 35, who is on trial for shooting the Tejano singing star.

"She was pointing it at her," Espinoza said under questioning by prosecutor Carlos Valdez.

"She was running back of Selena and pointing the gun at her — in her right hand," added Norma Martinez, a motel housekeeper, who also identified Ms. Saldivar. "She just called and called her: 'Bitch!' She just pointed the gun down, turned around and went to the door."

"She seemed calm," said Santos Avalos, another housekeeper who described the scene.

Ms. Saldivar is accused of murdering Selena and could face punishment of up to life in prison if convicted. Her testimony in Judge Mike Westergaard's court began Wednesday.

Thursday's testimony disputed Selena's defense claims that a hysterical Ms. Saldivar shot the Grammy-winning singer on Quinlan Perez March 31 in a motel room while waving the .38-caliber revolver.
