DEMOLITION

thing for the University."

When the buildings will be demolished is now up to University officials.

Dr. Ray Bowen, Texas A&M president, said any plans to build new residence halls would be at least two years in the future.

"I don't think we have the cash flow now," Bowen said. "The small fee increases are designed to start producing a reserve about a year from now. Once we have that reserve, we'll have the cash flow to cover the bonding possibilities."

Regent T. Michael O'Connor of Victoria, said one of the things that concerned him about the demolition of Law and Puryear was the loss of cheap housing.

"I want us to have the affordability scale for students," O'Connor said. "I hope we have the ability to build new dorms and re-adjust that scale."

Regent Robert Allen of Houston, said that the spartan accommodations of the dorms is what made them inexpensive.

"I lived in Puryear, Law and Hart, ... and that was monastic," Allen said. "There is a level of students that comes here that ... would be more willing to live in a more modest style to meet his budget."

Dr. J. Malon Southerland, vice president for student affairs, said if new residence halls are considered, those issues would be addressed.

"One of our main concerns when we build new dorms is how much people will have to pay for them,"

Southerland said. "But if you look at our rate structure, we have a lot of breadth."

O'Connor said he would do more than just suggest the University build new housing.

"I'll be insistent," he said. "When you lose facilities of that nature, there should be a plan to build new ones."

Bowen said it would be unlikely that new dorms would be built on the same spot as Law and Puryear, but housing may be built on West Campus and would be apartment-style buildings.

"We've got a growing population of students on the West Campus," he said. "Quite frankly, it would show respect to the changing demographics on campus."

Regent John Lindsey of Houston, facilities, planning and building committee chairman, said honoring Dr. Francis Marion Law, a Houston banker and a former chairman of the Board of Regents, and Dr. Charles Puryear, a noted academic, was important to him.

"We want to design some sort of marker there to let people know forever about them," he said. "We want to make sure people know that the dormitories in their name were on that spot."

"There'll be no parking lot there, I guarantee it."

Peel said the space were Law and Puryear now stand would most likely be occupied by "green space."

"The plans are ... to preserve this site for some sort of memorial to Dr. Law and Dr. Puryear," he said. "My understanding is that the present plan is to preserve that as green space."

CAMPUS

"I'm disappointed, but I think we were all expecting it," Sanchez, a senior marketing and management major, said. "I'm kind of happy that it's over."

The final word on demolition came after almost nine months since the department requested that the halls being taken down because of structural problems.

Last January, the Board refused to grant the department's request, so more studies could be done.

Dr. J. Malon Southerland, vice president for student affairs, said the Board's change of heart came from the additional information available.

"It was appropriate to develop a full set of information about both the condition and possible scenarios of demolition," Southerland said. "Once there were three consulting engineering reports that recommended for safety reasons that they be demolished, then the Board accepted."

In March, the RHA called for higher hall rents to provide $6.4 million to restore the halls. But Lyons said that was before the new figures were released.

"When we passed that resolution, we thought it would only cost $6 million," she said. "But now that it looks like it will be almost $11 million and with the rents already going up, it's in the best interest of the residents that the halls be demolished."

Heath Taylor, RHA leadership training committee member and former Law Hall president, said the halls will be missed because of the attitude they inspired among their residents.

"There will be some things that will be lost," Taylor, a senior construction science major, said. "You're going to lose the spirit and camaraderie that those halls had."

The RHA and the Division of Student Affairs is looking into what should be done with the space where Puryear and Law now stand. Some of options include a park, a memorial to the buildings namesakes or new halls on the site.

"We're discussing lots of options," Lyons said. The Division is also discussing plans for more residence halls, perhaps on West Campus, to make up for the lost housing.

Sanchez said that if new halls are erected, whether it is on the current Law and Puryear site or not, that they should not be called Law or Puryear.

of the fibers, is going to be so slick that it's going to be dangerous next year."

Approval was not without dissent. Regent Guadalupe Rangel of Corpus Christi, voted against the proposal.

"My biggest concern is that we weren't even told about this until 10 days ago," Rangel said, "and the timing in terms of raising student fees."

Rangel said that even though students will not pay for the change, it will touch a nerve.

"The parents will have to look at that new grass field," she said, "and I know they won't have to pay for it, but they may not realize that."

The 12th Man Foundation, not students or parents, will pay for the renovations.

The proposal also included the conversion of the grass practice field to artificial turf for inclement weather practices and for the needs of the Department of Kinesiology. Two new grass practice fields were approved and will be located where the Omar Smith Tennis Complex is now located.

Phase two involves the construction of a new $1.9 million varsity tennis complex, and phase three will be the addition of new seating in Kyle Field.

Only the first phase was approved by the Board, as well as $100,000 to begin planning and other related project costs.

Groff said the approval of phase one commits A&M to follow through with phase two. The expansion of Kyle Field, however, is a separate issue to be decided by the Board later.

The addition of new seating at Kyle Field will improve the seating in the north end "horseshoe" section considerably, Groff said.

"People are amazed that we have a top 10 or 20 football program and yet we cannot sell out all our home games," he said. "Twenty percent of our budget comes from the 12th Man, and they just don't have the seats to sell."

Lindsey said that even though the decision to expand Kyle Field was in the future, there was still one thing every student he talked to wanted to know now.

"What about Reveille?" he said.

Groff said the location of A&M's mascots buried behind the stands will be taken into consideration.

"We are cognizant of that issue, and we will certainly get back with the students on that," he said. "She will still be able to see the scoreboard, so to speak."
