CHAIRS

science graduate student, was selected by Harman. Kindrick is not a member of GSC. Harman said she thinks the overall effect of having two associate vice chairmen will be positive. "I am really excited to work with both of them," Harman said. "It's going to be for the best. I just wish it could have come about in a different way."

The agreement also specifies that Harman can not conduct committee business when McKee is not present. To ensure constant communication, Harman and McKee must meet biweekly with student activity advisers and Jill Jackson, Student Government vice president of finance.

McKee said she is satisfied with the compromise.

"My opinion is that we came up with an agreement that was beneficial to all parties involved," McKee said.

Although relations between the Student Government and GSC have been strained in recent weeks, Moore said both parties will be able to put their disagreements behind them.

"We have a good agreement with Student Government," she said. "We can continue to do business. This will not be an adversarial situation."

Boeing said he is relieved the issue has been resolved.

"I'm glad we're moving on and that now the committee will be able to do its job," he said.

Sommers said the prevailing misinformation is driving a rift between men and women.

"Society will be even more polarized on the fault-line of sex if the current situation continues," Sommers said.

She also addressed the fallacy of statistical information concerning anorexia, which radical feminists compare to the holocaust. Many feminists believe that about 150,000 women die annually from anorexia, but the National Center for Health Statistics says only 8,331 women die from all causes each year.

Sommers emphasized the importance of the equity movement as the original foundation of the feminist movement. The intent of equity feminists, who wanted the right to vote, was to dispel the belief that women were prone to hysteria and irrationality, she said.

The true cause of feminism, she said, has been lost in excesses of victimization and political correctness that are the exact opposite from what the equity feminists wanted.

Who Stole Feminism? was Sommers' reply to these problems and a call for change in the feminist movement, she said.

"I wrote the book because I am convinced that the feminist movement has taken a terribly wrong turn at a time when we need a strong women's movement."

Sommers believes that the enormous progress that women have made is being ignored as radical feminists focus on such problems as the "beauty-myth conspiracies" and today's "patriarchal system of oppression."

Feminists should focus on the many accomplishments women have achieved as they strive to reach parity with men, she said.

"Equity feminism may not be fully achieved, but it is a great American success story," Sommers said.

While there are issues of inequality that must be resolved, Sommers said, American women are not oppressed.

Joshua McClure, a sophomore agricultural engineering major, said he supported Sommers' strong emphasis on equal opportunity.

"She basically feels that women should be treated equally, but not preferentially," McClure said.

Members of the National Organization for Women disagreed with Sommers on many issues.

Susan Schulz, a freshman international studies major, said that Sommers "debated issues that women face daily."

Angela Rodriguez, a senior biochemistry major, said the speech was limiting because it focused on women within academia.

"There is a discrepancy between her experience and the experiences of most women because of socioeconomic status," Rodriguez said.

SHAMBURGER

wound, and Bux said it was possible.

Defense lawyers later asked that testimony by Officer Luther O'Banion be entered into evidence. O'Banion addressed the prosecution's charges that Shamburger committed a series of robberies and credit card forgeries in August and September 1994 before attempting to rob Baker a second time.

O'Banion revealed Shamburger had used credit cards he had stolen from Baker and her neighbors. He said Shamburger charged more than $1,200, buying mostly luxury items, ranging from golf shoes and cologne to a silver belt buckle and cigars.

O'Banion told the court Shamburger used Baker's credit card at 11:57 on the night of her murder to buy a gas can, a gallon of gas and lottery tickets at Jud's Food Store on Wellborn Road.

The gas can was the same type found melted in Baker's bedroom.

Kristin Harrison, Baker's friend, told the court she and Baker had lived together from 1992 to May 1994. She testified Baker and Shamburger had been friends during fall 1992, and they had gone dancing together several times.

Harrison said Baker was concerned because she felt Shamburger was pursuing a deeper relationship, which she had not encouraged. Baker ended her acquaintance with Shamburger in late 1992, she said.

Testimony will continue today at 8:30 a.m.
