forts against SMU and their other Southwest Conference brethren this year. But, come this time next year, meager efforts against Big 12 competition won't cut it. A&M also won't have lame SWC prey to feast on and rectify an entire season against.

In 1994, A&M was on probation, off of television and ineligible for the conference championship. They had nothing to play for, yet one thing kept the Aggies charged up — pride. That single driving force alone propelled the Aggies to their first undefeated season since 1956 — and that was reward enough. However, since their disappointing loss to Colorado, the Aggies have been lacking the fire they possessed last year. In order to be fair to themselves and break out of their complacent mode, the Aggies must approach the rest of the season with a chip on their shoulders. They took a step in that direction last week against Baylor. Talent alone may win football games in the SWC, but that won't work down the line. It's obvious the Aggies have the heart and desire to exceed, or they wouldn't have been talking national championship a few weeks ago. A&M can and will succeed in the Big 12. The team just needs to do a little soul searching and regain its no holds-barred attitude over the course of an entire season. That shouldn't be too difficult or too much to ask. After all, there are only 11 games.
