

SHAMBURGER

White said he was shocked when he heard about the murder because he never would have thought Shamburger capable of such a violent crime.

James White, a Bryan resident and member of Hillcrest Baptist Church, said he and his wife became acquainted with Shamburger through their church's Adopt-an-Aggie program.

Shamburger was a regular visitor at James Whites' house, and he and the Bryan resident even went camping and hiking together.

James White said Shamburger, whom he became close friends with, confided in him about many things, including his Christian faith and plans for the future.

But even though Shamburger continued to visit James White throughout August and September, White said he had no idea of the criminal activities Shamburger was involved with during this time period, such as using stolen credit cards.

"I've never been more shocked in my life," James White said of the moment he heard about Baker's murder.

James White, who has stayed in contact with Shamburger since the murder, said Shamburger has always seemed sincere about his Christian principles.

Christy McIntyre, an A&M junior interdisciplinary studies major, became friends with Shamburger when they were both counselors for the Hillcrest Baptist Youth Group.

McIntyre said Shamburger sometimes was a pest, insulting others in a joking manner.

"He wasn't the most popular person, but he did have friends," she said.

Shamburger seemed to be in normal spirits in August, when they both went on a Hillcrest Baptist Church retreat, McIntyre said.

McIntyre said she saw Shamburger the day before the murder and invited him to go dancing Sept. 30, 1994, night of the murder.

Shamburger said he did not know what his plans were yet, but would call her back and let her know, McIntyre said he never returned her call.

All of the witnesses said they maintained their relationships with Shamburger throughout the trial, and will continue to despite his conviction.

Closing arguments will begin at 9 a.m. in the 361st District Courtroom at the Brazos County Courthouse.
