Southerland to hold Student Leader Reception

All campus leaders are invited to the vice president for student affairs' home the morning of Saturday's football game.

THE BATTALION

Texas A&M student leaders will mingle with administrators Saturday at the Student Leader Reception.

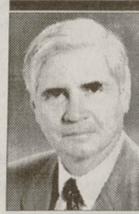

The event is sponsored by Dr. J. Malon Southerland, vice president for student affairs, and will be held at Southerland's home the morning of the A&M-University of Houston football game.

"It's an opportunity for the administration to express thanks to student leaders from various organizations," Southerland said. "It's primarily a way for me, as chief University officer working with students, to say, 'Thank you.'" and a senior political science major, said A&M Student Government officers are not paid, which is common among large universities.

Becky Silloway, Student Senate speaker

"Aggie leaders are here on campus for positive reasons," she said. "This is a way of giving them thanks for all the positive things they do."

All leaders of student organizations, not just Student Government officers, are invited.

"They're all invited," Southerland said. "It gives them the opportunity to interact among other student leaders."

Patrick Conway, MSC Council president and a senior genetics major, said the reception works with a variety of groups. This will facilitate interaction among them.

"It's another opportunity for me, as a student, to communicate with my fellow students," he said. "Maybe we can have more cooperative programs."

Southerland said many top administrators have also been invited. He hopes many of them will come.

"It's a good social function for the student leaders to get to know the administrators," he said. "The more we talk and meet, the better we can work together."

Conway said some of the organizations do not have much direct contact with administrators, and this is a chance for them to establish that contact.

"I think it's very important for a diverse group of students to give their input to the administration," he said. "All the administration will be receptive to student's input."
