Subway fire kills 300, injures hundreds more

□ The disaster in Baku Saturday has been blamed on a malfunction of the train's electrical system.

BAKU, Azerbaijan (AP) — Rescue workers recovered about 300 bodies Sunday from the wreckage of a subway that caught fire in the capital, trapping hundreds of terrified passengers. At least 200 others were injured.

Unable to escape from the packed cars, most of the people who died were killed by carbon monoxide poisoning from burning toxic materials in the train carriages, officials said.

Azerbaijan declared two days of mourning for the dead. Officials blamed the tragedy, the worst underground railway accident in the former Soviet Union, on the Baku subway's "outdated Soviet" equipment.

"As soon as the train entered the tunnel, I saw a flash," said Tabil Guseinov, age 45, a passenger. "Then the flames enveloped the train car; there was a sound of breaking glass, and the lights went out."

"People started breaking windows to get out. We were starting to suffocate," he said.

The fire broke out between two subway stations in central Baku on Saturday afternoon because of a malfunction of the train's electrical system, officials said.

Survivors described sparks flying from high-voltage cables just after the train left the busy Ul-duz station.

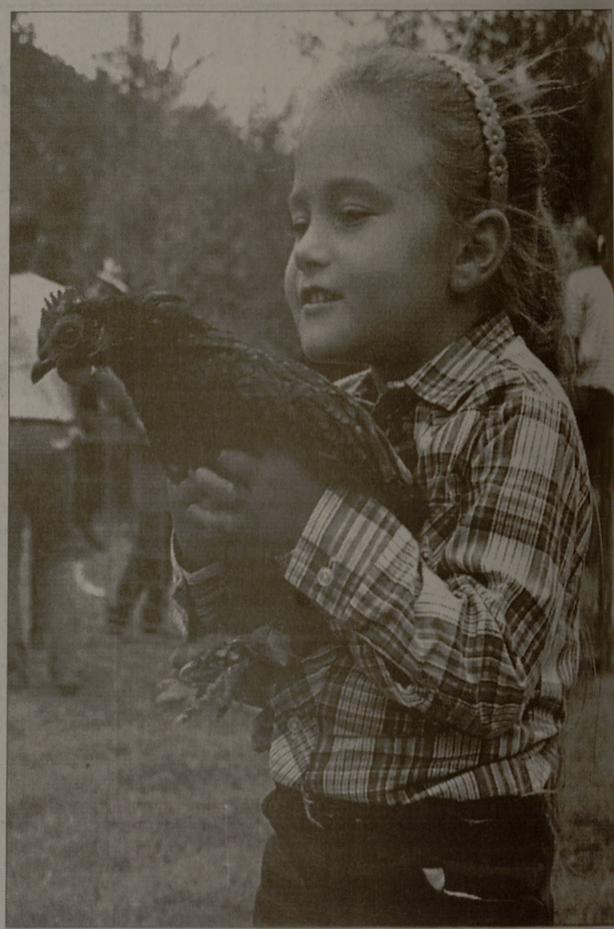

Rescuers battled the blaze until early Sunday, then pulled the injured and the dead, wrapped in rugs and blankets, from the tunnel. Police and security forces sealed off the area, barring journalists.

Authorities initially said only two people had died in the fire, but the death toll climbed steadily overnight as more bodies were found.

Interior Minister Ramil Usubov told The Associated Press on Sunday morning that at least 289 people had died, including 28 children.

Morgue officials said they counted at least 303 bodies, and the independent Azerbaijani news agency Turan quoted medical officials as putting the death toll at 337.

Azerbaijan's health minister, Ali Insanov, said 269 people were injured. Of the injured, 62 remained hospitalized Sunday, most of them in serious condition.

Over 200 school bus drivers on road with traffic convictions

□ Accidents have risen more than 20 percent, and injuries to children are up more than 55 percent.

le's computer analysis of records belonging to the state's 55,000 certified school bus drivers, during a three-year period ending Aug. 31, 1994.

Another two were cited for drunken driving. Fifty more were ticketed for accidents.

School bus accidents in Texas have risen more than 20 percent in the past four years — from 1,198 in 1991 to 1,449 in 1994, according to the Texas Department of Public Safety.

Injuries to children are up more than 55 percent — from 826 in 1991 to 1,282 in 1994, state records show.

The news comes on the heels of last week's accident in Chicago, in which seven high school students died and dozens were injured when a train struck a school bus. Investigators believe a signal problem may have contributed to that accident, but the driver's actions are also under scrutiny.

In Texas, drivers can be certified to drive a school bus after completing a 20-hour training course at the Texas Education Agency's regional service centers. The certificate must be renewed every three years with an eight-hour refresher course.

In September, new legislation transferred the bus driver certification program from combined enforcement by the Texas Education Agency and the DPS to the DPS alone with the idea of promoting more efficient monitoring.

BUSH

"Thank you for this high honor," Bush said. "I'm thrilled to be back on this campus, and I'm privileged to have this school named for me."

At the Board meeting, Dr. Ray Bowen, Texas A&M president, said the school was named for Bush to honor his tenure as president and his decision to locate the presidential library on the A&M campus.

The George Bush Presidential Library

Center will feature not only the presidential library, archives and museum, but an academic building that will house the political science and economics schools, as well as the School of Government and Public Service.

Bush said the school should serve to convince "young people that civil service is a noble cause and an honorable cause."

Dr. Barry B. Thompson, Texas A&M chancellor, said the library center will serve not only the students, but also the Bryan-College Station community.

"One of the uses of this library, which a lot of people are overlooking, is that everyone from this area will be able to come and use this library," Thompson said. "We're in a generally rural area, and people from all around can come and read all of these important documents."

By educating others outside the University community, A&M is serving its teaching mission, Thompson said, and this effort will help the University with funding from the Texas Legislature.

Bush, who will also teach at the University, said his classes will involve "learning a lot from the young people at Texas A&M."

Mary Nan West, Board of Regents chairman, said Bush should have no trouble teaching.

"I consider him a gentle man, and a gentleman," West said. "I think he will be an excellent teacher, and I think any student who takes one of his classes will be honored."
