Alabama must face NCAA before Auburn

□ If the NCAA lifts the ban on Alabama, they will go to a bowl game.

ATLANTA (AP) — Alabama's bowl hopes ride on what happens in an Atlanta hotel meeting room on Thursday, not at Jordan-Hare Stadium in Auburn on Saturday.

Just two days before playing archrival Auburn for state bragging rights, the No. 17 Crimson Tide goes before the NCAA Appeals Committee to challenge key NCAA findings.

On Aug. 2, the NCAA placed Alabama's football program on three years probation, banned it from postseason play for one year, ordered it to forfeit 11 games in 1993 and lose some two dozen scholarships over three years. The university wants the NCAA to lift the postseason ban, the forfeits and the third year of probation, restoring nine of the lost scholarships.

The sanctions and probation were imposed after the NCAA found Alabama guilty of rules violations involving former players Antonio Langham and Gene Jelks.

With a record of 8-2 (5-2 in the Southeastern Conference) Alabama would qualify for a bowl if the appeals panel agreed to lift the ban on postseason play.

Because bowl matchups will be made final next week and bids go out Dec. 3, Alabama administrators are asking for a decision by Monday.

"We feel that any time after Nov. 27 would work an inconvenience on the SEC and its member schools," said Culpepper Clark, administrative assistant to university president Roger Sayers.

History is against Alabama. All six appeals made under the current NCAA system have been denied.

"That makes us optimistic," Clark said. "After all, there has to be odds in everything."

A key issue will be the NCAA's finding that former faculty athletics representative Tom Jones was unethical in answering allegations that Langham signed with an agent in 1993.

Alabama contends it was unfairly blind-sided by the charge involving Jones and did not have a chance to respond before the NCAA Infractions Committee, which imposed the penalties following a June hearing.

"Had we known such a charge was being defended against, we would have defended against that charge during the hearing," Clark said.

Jones, vice dean of the law school, has since stepped down from the athletics post, and Hootie Ingram resigned as athletics director. Former Brigham Young athletic director Glen Tuckett was brought in as interim AD to help repair the damage.

In addition to the postseason ban, Alabama was forced to give up 26 scholarships over three years and to forfeit eight wins from 1993, when Langham continued playing despite having signed a representation contract.

Alabama contended Langham, a star defensive back now with the NFL's Cleveland Browns, was allowed to continue playing through an inadvertent error.

The allegations surrounding Jelks involved claims he received an improper loan from an Alabama booster and agent after his eligibility was completed.

NBA referee lockout may end by Friday

□ NBA officials met with union representatives for three hours on Wednesday.

NEW YORK (AP) — NBA referees, locked out since Oct. 1, could reach an agreement with the league by Friday, said Mike Mathis, the union's lead negotiator.

Mathis and other union representatives met for about three hours Wednesday with NBA officials, including commissioner David Stern. Negotiations were to continue Thursday.

"We're encouraged," said Mathis, a 19-year veteran ref. "The dialogue is open. We feel good about what went on today."

The talks were the first face-to-face negotiations since Oct. 28, and for the first time, the NBA's contingent included Stern.

"We agreed not to go into any specifics about our meeting," said Jeffrey Mishkin, the league's chief legal officer. "It's too early to say whether or not we are making any progress."

Mathis, however, was more optimistic. He said it was possible a deal could be concluded by the end of the week, indicating the two sides have moved closer together on salary figures.

"We'll be able to tell more tomorrow," he said. "Once we get past the bottleneck issues, it would go pretty quick."

Once an agreement is reached, the 54 regular refs could be back on the court in about a week after completing a brief training camp.

On Tuesday, the NBA sweetened its offer to the referees, proposing a five-year deal with an average annual increase of 8.3 percent.
