BOSNIA

solidified next month in Paris. "The Dayton accords have been one of the most joyful experiences in the last four years," she said. Dr. Betty Unterberger, an A&M history professor, spoke during the presentation and moderated a question-and-answer session afterward. Unterberger offered sobering remarks on the importance of the peace talks and American understanding of the Bosnian situation. "In Dayton, Ohio, representatives of the major constituents signed a peace agreement," she said. "It brought to an end, at least for the present, the bloody, brutal war that has gone on for four years and resulted in 250,000 dead." Americans' personal involvement in the conflict, Unterberger said, has been limited to media exposure. "Americans were horrified by the slaughter that we saw graphically portrayed on our TV screens," she said, "but they knew almost nothing about the people." The essential element necessary for peace in the European conflict will not necessarily be the international involvement, Unterberger said, but the will of the peoples involved to end the years of bloodshed. "Are the peoples of Bosnia ready to commit to peace?" she said. "Has there now been sufficient slaughter — sufficient dispersion of refugees throughout Europe — for the people of Bosnia, regardless of ethnicity, to commit to peace?" Students attending the lecture offered support for the Bosnian and Croatian representatives, but held differing views on fighting in general. Jason Glen, Wiley Lecture Series assistant and a sophomore political science major, said the United States is sending the helpless in the conflict, taking sides. History shows that the concern for the region should be international, Glen said, not necessarily military. "World War I and World War II started there," he said, "so from a historical standpoint, I'd be hesitant to send troops in there." Rick Fournier, a sophomore mechanical engineering major and member of the Force ROTC, said the United States is helping like a responsible world power. "I believe the United States has a duty to help the world," Fournier said.

DEMOCRATS

the Brazos Valley president, said the event should be a success. Parrish said the large number of Democratic women in the county was a major motivator behind the event. "Part of the reason we (Texas Democratic Women) wanted to have the kickoff is because there are a lot of democratic women around here," she said. "One of the biggest motivations is people like Newt, Rush and the boys, who can get these women all excited about getting together. "We're going to just be getting ready for next fall's elections, and we are anxious for everyone to get together." As part of the kickoff celebration, Cecile Richards, daughter of former governor Ann Richards and founder of the Texas Freedom Alliance, will speak at the event. In addition to speakers, the event will provide music by Big Apple Trio, a group headed by a Texas A&M music professor, food and tables from various democratic groups. The Texas Freedom Alliance is an alliance of mainstream organizations from around the state that offer an alternative to the radical right. Richards said she will address the issue of education in Texas. "Generally, what I talk about is public education," she said. "We'll be talking, though, about school board races and races for the State Board of Education. "We'll also be talking a little bit about what we've been doing around the state."

CLINTON

The mission comes on the heels of an agreement signed in Dayton, Ohio, last week to stop the bloodiest fighting in Europe since World War II, claiming 250,000 lives. "We must not turn our backs on Bosnia now," Clinton said. "And so I ask all Americans — and I ask every member of Congress, Democrat and Republican alike, to make the choice for peace. In the choice between peace and war, American must choose peace." Clinton said the Bosnia mission "can succeed because the mission is clear and limited. Our troops are strong and very well prepared." And yet, Clinton acknowledged, "no deployment of American troops is risk free and this may well involve casualties." Clinton had promised to request Congress' support for the mission, but made clear he would invoke his powers as commander in chief to deploy the forces if lawmakers resisted. It appeared Congress would defer to the president — and him shoulder the responsibility as well. "The president has the authority and the power under the Constitution to do what he should be doing, regardless of what Congress does," said House Speaker Newt Gingrich said, "I think people are skeptical but I think they're willing to listen." House Democratic Leader Richard Gephardt said Clinton made a strong case for U.S. involvement, and added, "If America doesn't lead the world, who will?"
