Constitution

is approved, Student Government will operate as usual. If disapproved, the constitution will be revised within the organization.

"If not approved by the students, the constitution would be taken before the Student Senate and student body president to be retooled," he said.

"Then we would run it by the students again in another referendum."

Chris Reed, Student Senate speaker pro tempore and a junior finance major, said he sees no reason why the constitution will not be approved.

"This is not controversial," he said.

"It just gives the basic framework of how the Student Government works."

Reed said he hopes students approve the referendum.

"It would be very tragic if students voted no to this referendum," he said, "because then the Student Government would be null and void until reorganized, and the students would be without a voice or representation."

Run-off elections will be held from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Thursday at the MSC, Evans Library, the Wehner, Kleberg and Zachry Buildings, the Commons and the Underground.

Resurrection: More than 30 organizations involved

Forty students representing 30-35 organizations are members of Resurrection Week committees.

Klawitter said that any evangelical Christian organization is allowed to participate and plan the week's events, and everyone is invited to attend.

Both Woodward and Klawitter stressed the fact that although everyone is allowed to attend the activities, a group must believe in the same fundamental beliefs as Resurrection Week committee members to fund or organize the events.

A group of Mormon students offered to help organize the first Resurrection Week, Woodward said, but were turned down. Since Mormons' basic foundation of beliefs differ from evangelical Christian groups, he said, they cannot organize Resurrection Week.

Resurrection Week's main source of funding is the T-shirt sale. Churches and campus organizations donate money, but no funding comes from the University.

Stephanie Sutton, a sophomore general studies major, is a counselor on the Resurrection Week discipleship committee.

A counselor's job is to talk to students after events are over, presenting the gospel to them.

"I think Resurrection Week has made me examine what I believe," Sutton said.

"Resurrection Week has helped me affirm my own beliefs and given me an opportunity to share my faith with others."
