top priority is to "make students feel like they have a voice in the office of the student body president."

Within the next few weeks, Baggett will select his vice president and other executive council members.

Baggett's election marked the end of a campaign many described as highly controversial.

For example, at an April 3 rally held on campus in support of affirmative action, a student declared to a crowd gathered at Rudder Fountain that she would not vote for Baggett because she questions Baggett's willingness to embrace diversity.

Laurie Peebles, a member of Baggett's 20-person campaign staff and senior nutrition major, said Baggett handled rumors that surfaced during the campaign well, setting a good example and earning respect.

"He said if you can't win a campaign on your own merits," Peebles said, "you don't deserve to win."

But "overcoming stereotypes and rumors" is an obstacle Hurd said Baggett will have to face going into his presidency.

He said he hopes those who do not like the Corps of Cadets will not automatically discredit Baggett.

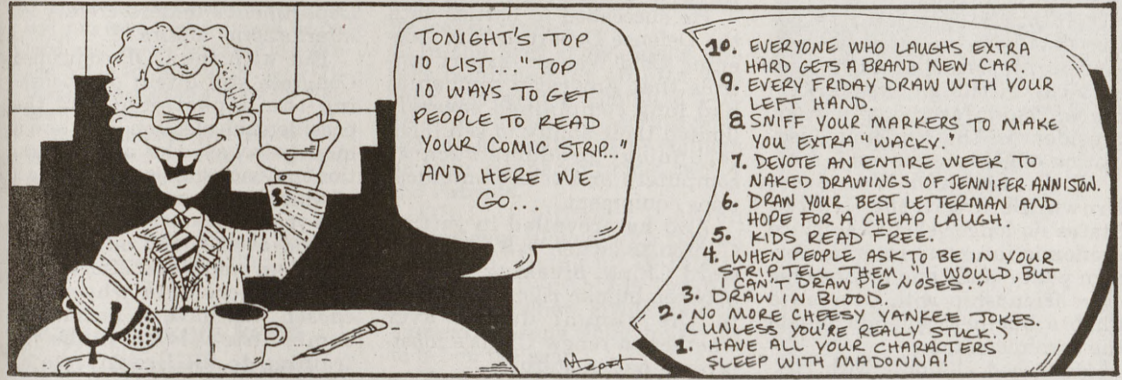

"Everyone has to see him as Carl Baggett the president and not Carl Baggett the member of the Corps of Cadets," he said. "They have to judge him on his actions. I hope everybody has an open mind and gives Carl a chance right from the beginning."

Amy Vandaveer, a member of Baggett's campaign staff and senior English and speech communications major, said this year's campaigns were marked by an excessive amount of mudslinging.

"I think the Student Government campaigns need to focus more on Agginess and what's going to benefit A&M," Vandaveer said, "rather than trying to trash the other candidates."

Members of Ryan Shopp's campaign staff agreed that there were too many rumors circulated about all of the candidates in this year's campaigns, but some said the mudslinging was even worse last year.
