Baggett

"Carl has no sense of direction," he said. "He doesn't know how to get to places. He will ask how to get to Wal-Mart."

Webb, who has known Baggett since they worked together as redpots two and a half years ago, said Baggett must make several trips before he knows how to get somewhere.

When Webb met Baggett for the first time, he said Baggett asked to borrow money for food; a friendship developed nonetheless.

"The first time I met him we pretty much hit it off," he said. "He never did pay me back my couple of bucks."

Will Hurd, a freshman computer science major and Baggett's campaign manager, said he first met Baggett after a speech Baggett gave at Fish Camp.

Hurd said his first impression of Baggett was that he was passionate about A&M.

"It was the way he talked," he said. "He would get real impassioned about A&M. You could see it in his eyes ... The school is part of him."

Perhaps his enthusiasm for A&M and Bonfire comes from the fact that Baggett has been attending A&M football games since he was four years old and has not missed Bonfire in 12 years.

Hurd said it was a challenge to keep up with Baggett during the campaign because Baggett involves himself so heavily with A&M activities.

"He was so damn busy," he said. Hurd said he and Baggett spent a great deal of time together nonetheless.

"His girlfriend and his sister called me the ball and chain," he said.

Sparks may fly between Baggett and his girlfriend of two years, but nothing can compare to the fireworks Baggett set off as a young boy.

"I was a pyromaniac," he said. "I played with matches."

Baggett said he started a small fire in his home when he was 10 by lighting fireworks in his closet.

The incident was not damaging, he said, but it scared him enough not to do it again.

However, fear did not keep Baggett away from this year's elections, despite his loss to Toby Boenig last year in the run-offs.

Baggett said it may have been a risk running for office again, but that is the kind of thing A&M inspires.

"You learn just as much losing as you do winning," he said. "I think the biggest difference between a fish entering A&M and a senior leaving is not as much the education as it is the experience they gain taking risks."

But Baggett's confidence does not imply that academics have never been a challenge for him.

He said the fear of not being able to handle college courses inspired him to join the Corps of Cadets.

"I was not a scholar in high school, and I felt that having three hours of forced study every night would at least set me in the right direction," he said.

The studying benefited Baggett, who has been chosen for CBA Fellows, a leadership program for the top one percent of business students.

Baggett is in the five-year accounting program business, but he said he will withdraw from it to meet his office's demands.

"All the plans and beliefs that I ran on are going to be implemented so that I don't let anyone down," he said.

Webb said several of Baggett's personality traits will make him a good student body representative.

For example, he said, Baggett remembers the names and faces of most people he meets.

"It just makes people feel more comfortable, like they are on the same level, and that he is not unapproachable," he said.

Webb said Baggett's emphasis on organization will also help him as student body president. Baggett carries a file in which he can find tons of information with the flip of a wrist.

"But his room looks like crap," he said.

Webb said one thing he notices about Baggett is he practices good personal hygiene.

"You will be hard pressed to find a better smelling guy," he said.

"You would not walk up to him and say 'damn that man smells good,'" he said, "but you definitely notice his lack of a foul odor."

Webb said many guys in the dorm lack personal hygiene, but Baggett is not one of them. "Carl does not strike you as one of those guys," he said.

"If you were to walk up to him right now he would not smell bad," he said.

One of Baggett's greatest hopes is that people will not treat him differently now that he is president.

"I hope everyone will treat me the same as they always did," he said. "I am still Carl Baggett — friend, Class of '96, companion, who is here to get an education just like everyone else."
