necessity," Mitchell said.

He also argued that legislators often fail to take a stand on foreign policy because they feel they do not have a voice.

Then, the same legislators quickly criticize when they feel the United States errs in foreign policy.

"Legislators enjoy being Monday-morning quarter-backs," Mitchell said.

"The mentality is 'Since I don't control decisions, I'm not going to control the discussion.'"

Although Mitchell said Clinton's foreign policy has been successful, Quayle said the United States needs to concentrate more on relations with Russia and China.

"We have had times of euphoria," Quayle said.

"Now it is a time of cold reality."

"Many people think the Corps and fraternities have strong rivalries," Nisbet said. "I don't believe that's true. They have a lot more in common than people think."

All proceeds from the game will be divided among the organizations represented by the two teams. The Corps will use the money for its scholarship fund, and the IFC will donate its share to a Bryan-College Station family in need.

Trey Schroeder, IFC external vice president and senior business analysis major, said the fraternity team's six untimely defensive errors contributed to its demise.

Schroeder said the game was "pretty standard" because of average pitching and rusty play by the participants, most of whom have probably not played in a baseball game during the last year.

"It's hard to come back into (baseball) and be in the swing of things," Schroeder said.

Players on both teams were selected after week-long tryouts. Seventeen players comprised the Fraternity team and 20 the Corps team.

Marc Mulkey, a Corps player and senior industrial distribution major, said the game promotes A&M spirit, and despite the bashing the rival teams might display, the game is played in good fun.

committee to keep it from reaching the Senate floor again. But he vowed to do everything he can to make sure it would not be killed.

Dave Brown, a Northside senator and junior political science major, opposed the resolution and supported the referral, denying that opponents would try to kill the measure in committee.

"(Sending the resolution to committee) was not intended to kill it," Brown said. "All we wanted was a chance to poll those we represent."

In other business, the Senate:

- Confirmed nine appointments for Student Body President Carl Baggett's administration, including two newly created positions, director of total quality management and chief of staff.

Baggett, a senior accounting major, said the chief of staff will head a council of liaisons or student organization representatives to provide an outlet to express concerns to the student body president.

The Senate confirmed the following positions: Matt Mayfield, a junior animal science major, as executive vice president; Nikki Guerra, a senior civil engineering major, as executive director for minority student affairs; Kristen Paris, a sophomore biomedical science major, and Laurie Nickel, a sophomore general studies major, as vice presidents for programs and operations; Chris Cochran, a junior industrial engineering major, as vice president for communications; Laurent Therival, a senior marketing major, as vice president for finance; Tracey McAllister, a senior marketing major, as director of total quality management; Amy Bigbee, a sophomore chemical engineering major, as chief of staff; and Curtis Watson, a junior business administration major, as judicial board chair.

- Passed the Supermajority Fee Justification Bill, which requires approval of two-thirds of the Senate to recommend establishment of any fee increase.

- Referred the Student Service Fee Allocation Bill, which approves the recommendations of the Student Services Fee Allocation Committee but calls for changes to the committee's structure, to the Rules and Regulations Committee.

- Referred the Yell Leader Run-Off Bill, which would require the top five candidates for senior yell leader and the top four candidates for junior yell leader to compete in a run-off election, to the Rules and Regulations Committee.

- Referred the HSPR2 Name Change Bill, which would change the name of the High School Public Relations and Recruitment group to the Aggie Recruitment Committee, to the Rules and Regulations Committee.

without parole" was read for the fourth time, a large, gasp of relief came from the section where members of the Menendez family were seated.

In the wake of acquittals in the murder trials of O.J. Simpson and rapper Snoop Doggy Dogg, prosecutors claimed a much-needed success despite the jury's rejection of their call for the death penalty.

District Attorney Gil Garcetti, who faces one of his deputies in a tough November election, said the important thing was to remember the conviction and sentence mean the brothers "will spend the rest of their lives in prison."

"We believe that most people in this county — perhaps even in this country — now believe that there was justice in this case," Garcetti said.
